

Ex Libris

Eugene
Cassidy

GIFT OF
Mrs. John B. Casserly

EX LIBRIS

MISCELLANEOUS WRITINGS

OF THE LATE

DR. MAGINN,

EDITED BY

DR. SHELTON MACKENZIE.

VOL. IV.

Homeric Ballads and Translations,

AND

Comedies of Lucian.

HOMERIC BALLADS

AND

COMEDIES OF LUCIAN

TRANSLATED BY THE LATE

WILLIAM MAGINN, LL. D.

ANNOTATED BY

DR. SHELTON MACKENZIE

EDITOR OF "SHEIL'S SKETCHES OF THE IRISH BAR"—"NOCTES AMBROSIANÆ," ETC.

REDFIELD

34 BEEKMAN STREET, NEW YORK

1856

Entered, according to Act of Congress, in the year 1856,
By J. S. REDFIELD,
in the Clerk's Office of the District Court of the United States, in and for the Southern District of New York.

EDITOR'S PREFACE.

IN this volume, the fourth of Dr. Maginn's Miscellaneous Writings, will be found his translations of the Homeric Ballads, of sundry Homeric episodes, and of some of the Comedies of Lucian. They are now first collected, and contain almost the whole of Maginn's translations from the Greek poets. I say almost the whole, because Dr. Maginn's English version of the Batrachomyomachia (the mock-heroic Battle of the Frogs and Mice, ascribed to Homer), is not included. My two reasons for the omission will be considered plain enough and sufficient enough, I think. In the first place, I am not aware that this translation had ever appeared in print; and secondly, I have not been so fortunate as to meet it, in any shape.

The Homeric Ballads, sixteen in number, are not to be confounded with The Hymns generally attributed to Homer, of which some spirited translations into English verse, appeared in Blackwood's Magazine, nearly twenty years ago, from the pen of Dr. Badham. The first twelve of the Ballads, versified by Maginn, are portions of the Odyssey, sufficiently isolated in interest to bear separation from the main narrative, and sufficiently picturesque to permit their being rendered into English in a popular form, much akin, in fact, to that in which, tradition and conjecture agree in affirming, they were originally framed and sung. The Odyssey was Maginn's favorite. He may not have thought, with Bentley, that it was made for women, while the Iliad, with its heroic deeds, was composed for men, but he would have probably said, with Charles James Fox, when asked whether he would rather have written the Iliad or the Odyssey, that he preferred to read the latter.

VOL. IV.—1

Four of the Homeric Ballads have been taken from the Iliad, and the other three translations which I have recovered have also had their subjects supplied by the same heroic poem.

The publication of the Homeric Ballads, originally intended to have extended only to twelve, took place in Fraser's Magazine, and ran through that periodical, one for each month, in the year 1838. They excited such considerable attention, not only among learned but ordinary readers, that Maginn was induced to continue them. Three additional Ballads appeared between October, 1840, and his death in August, 1842. The last —

“The last! — oh by that little word
How many thoughts are stirred” — was published in Fraser in October, 1842, and was written down, from Maginn's death-bed dictation, by his devoted friend, and ardent admirer, Edward Kenealy, whose introduction to that poem (pp. 217–219 of the present volume), breathing at once serenity and simplicity, is imbued with a deeper pathos than more ambitious language might have failed to express.

Of the other Homeric translations, I may briefly say that The Wile of Juno, was a contribution to Blackwood's Magazine as early as 1820, while Maginn was a schoolmaster in Cork. At that time, Maginn was in the flush of that “purpurea juvenitus” which noiselessly passes into the abysm of the Past, almost before we know how rapidly it is vanishing. His mind, too, was then rich in its golden fruitage, and crowded with literary projects and literary enthusiasm which eventually produced little more than scattered fragments. The Wile of Juno was translated into the Spenserian stanza, and this shows how early Dr. Maginn had formed the opinion, deliberately placed on record some twenty years later, that “the only metre in which the Iliad and Odyssey as whole poems can be adequately translated into English is the Spenserian.” He added — and the mode of expression is rendered doubly affecting, now, from its very light-heartedness, “I have made considerable progress with such a translation, and sometimes think I may finish it. Why I am not sure of so doing will be found out by any one who takes the truth of consulting the seventh Satire of Juvenal." At the time he was penning these words, Dr. Maginn was already on the verge of the valley of the shadow of death.

Bacchus, or The Pirates, was also an early contribution to Blackwood, in the lyric metre of most of Scott's poems, as well as of Moore's Fire-Worshippers, and Byron's Giaour, Siege of Corinth, Parisina, Mazeppa, and Prisoner of Chillon. It was Maginn's belief that what Byron calls "the fatal facility of the octo-syllabic verse," if properly controlled, would not prevent its being advantageously employed in rendering several passages in the romantic parts of the classical poets, and that a great many portions of Homer particularly, were peculiarly fit for it. Most people, especially those who are acquainted with Scott's poetry, will admit that his favorite metre is admirably adapted for the rapid relation of occurrences, while (again to use Byron's words), "the stanza of Spenser is perhaps too slow and dignified for narrative." In the Bacchus, the adoption of the lyric metre has been so successful (for the translation is very spirited) as to excite surprise that Maginn, in further Homeric translations, did not employ it. He used it again, only once—in Fraser's Magazine for May, 1835, in his English version of Helen's Visit to the Scæan Gate, from the fifth book of the Iliad.

The translations of the Comedies of Lucian appeared subsequent to the first twelve of the Homeric Ballads.

Several years after Maginn's death, his Homeric Ballads were collected into a volume, and published in London. This collection was edited anonymously, by an excellent Greek scholar, who had acted as a sort of sub-editor to Fraser's Magazine, under Maginn, and was well qualified in many respects, for the task he had undertaken. From some cause, which I do not know and have puzzled myself in trying to conjecture, he treated the four Ballads which were published after 1838, as if they never had been written; that is, he wholly omitted them, and did not give a word of intimation of having done so.

To this heavy error of omission, was added, the offence of commission, for which, in his Preface, this gentleman even went the length of claiming credit. He there says:—

“Had the Author been spared to undertake himself the business of republication he would doubtless have made many corrections, especially in the notes. He repeatedly shows himself sensible of the faults which he was likely to commit, as being necessarily by the nature of his position an ephemeral and to a certain extent a political writer: and at the very close of his work he speaks of the apparent justice with which a charge of flippancy may be preferred against notes written in the usual hasty style of Magazine composition, and in English, on matters deemed worthy of the gravest attention. This temporary and superficial character it has not been found easy wholly to eradicate: nor indeed would it have been desirable to do so, as it must have destroyed the peculiar features which are stamped as on this, so on every production of Dr. Maginn’s pen, and exceeded even the widest construction of the duty of an Editor, whose imprimatur, far from being the same as that of an Author, simply engages him to remove what he believes to have been excrescences, such as any man’s calmer judgment would naturally have rejected. It is with this view that besides several alterations in the text of the Ballads, some affecting the language, others the sense, considerable omissions have been made in the Notes, which as they stood contained many passages fairly liable to objection. Dr. Maginn’s constitutional vivacity, heightened as it was by keen political feeling, had led him sometimes to introduce allusions foreign to the subject, at others to treat even matters of legitimate discussion in what may be called a party spirit, grateful no doubt to the readers of a periodical, but proportionately distasteful to those for whom it possesses no such adventitious interest.”

In the present volume, the Homeric Ballads are presented—precisely as Maginn published them, text and notes. It is not for an Editor to place himself above his Author, and when poems have been deliberately printed, revised, and published, to make unnecessary alterations in their text, “some affecting the language, others the sense.” With an humble opinion of my own capacity and judgment, I have re-produced Maginn’s translations, precisely as Maginn had printed them at first. The “alterations” of which the English editor boasts, were not improvements, even in a single instance. Sometimes they weakened the force of the language, sometimes they injured the rhythm. There was no occasion for the impertinence of making them, nor can I understand why they should have been made. I have added the capriciously omitted Ballads, and thus rendered the collection complete.

On the fidelity and literary merit of these translations, the opinion of the English editor is so tersely expressed, and so correct that I am justified in inserting it here. He says:—

“It is a trite, but a true saying, that our age, whatever may be the defects of its positive character, has pre-eminently the faculty of entering into the spirit of all former ages; and in no particular is this seen more clearly than in our notions of translation. Independently of a closer attention to the matter of an author, the duty of preserving his manner as much as possible was never so thoroughly felt as it is now. Before the present generation, a translation was always made in the style of its own period: and, accordingly, it was a mere matter of chance whether or no it bore any analogy to the style of the masterpiece of whom it professed to be a copy. Occasionally some instinct may have led the translator to a congenial original, but too frequently it happened that the classic authors, in obeying the summons to appear before the English world, fell upon evil times. The age in which Chapman took up the Iliad also produced versions of the Æneid in rude ballad-measure or most un-Virgilian Hexameters. Rowe’s success in Lucian is but a poor offset against the magnitude of Pope’s failure in Homer. Even so late as 1831 Mr. Sotheby appears to have thought that the terse and elegant couplets into which he had rendered the Georgics might be adapted (not without a considerable sacrifice of their own ease and beauty) to convey the spirit of the Homeric poems. It was against this erroneous practice that Dr. Maginn published his protest in behalf of Homer. He may be esteemed the first who consciously realized to himself the truth that Greek ballads can be really represented in English only by a similar measure. This is his great praise, and will continue after the success of his execution shall have been ratified by other workmen in the same field. . . . It is a sufficient condemnation of the various specimens of Hexameter translation which have been published of late years to say, that they answer to nothing in English. A really successful version of Homer, when made, will appear in some form already existing in our literature. Such an attempt is in no way superseded by the present publication, which will rather serve it as a prelude and harbinger. On the other hand, no triumphs of subsequent cultivation can detract from the merit of a work by which the ground was first broken up: a work which, like The Lays of Ancient Rome, its natural associate in the public mind, though its junior in point of time, aims at resolving into their constituent elements, whether primary or not, the records of a nation’s antiquity.”

The criticism of Mr. Kenealy, whose knowledge of Greek literature is only inferior, perhaps, to that which Dr. Maginn possessed, is more condensed than the foregoing, but not less appreciative. Speaking of Maginn’s scholarship, he says:—

"His fine knowledge of the Greek is best demonstrated by his admirable and witty translations from Lucian and his Homeric Ballads, which for antique dignity and faithfulness are unsurpassed by any versions in our language, and will carry his name down to all time with that of Pope; the one being like a sculptor who relies on the simple and unstudied grandeur of the naked figure; the other resembling a statuary who enchants every eye by the gorgeous drapery in which he invests the marble, and the picturesque adjuncts with which he surrounds it. Both are entirely distinct, and both inimitable in their way. One is a translation—the other a paraphrase. Those who wish to know what and how Homer wrote, must meet Maginn—those who seek to be delighted with The Iliad, must peruse Pope. The first may be illustrated by the Parthenon of Athens, a model of severe beauty, standing alone upon its classic hill, amid the wild olives, under the crystal skies of Hellas; the second by the Church of St. Peter's at Rome, where every extraneous ornament of price or brilliancy—painting, sculpture, cameos of gems and gold, perfume and stately arras—is added to give lustre to the temple. No one but a scholar could have completed the former. Pope was able to accomplish the latter."

Elsewhere, Mr. Kenealy says:—"The writings on which he appears to have bestowed most care, were the Homeric Ballads; and for the last few years he was seldom without a copy of the Iliad and Odyssey in his room, or on his bed. For those translations, indeed, he felt almost an enthusiasm—and always referred to them with satisfaction."

Of the prose accompaniments—Introductions and Notes—of the Homeric Ballads, a few words must be said. The notes, for the most part, refer to the original text, on which Maginn was a very exacting critic. When the Ballads originally appeared in Fraser, the Greek text was also given—I have taken the liberty of here omitting what to the generality of readers might present its too formidable appearance—Maginn pleasantly saying: "My translation is accompanied by the original, side by side; so that half of my page at least is good." The notes are of a miscellaneous character. Some will be interesting to the profound scholar, some will interest the mass of readers, as they refer to general subjects connected with what may be called Homeric Literature. Of learned writers, Maginn was one of the least pedantic. Except where he considered it absolutely necessary, he avoided classical quotations and scholastic disquisitions. Addressing himself, almost from boyhood to mature age, rather to the great body of the reading public than to ripe scholars, he avoided the display of mere learning—though, no doubt, his erudition enabled him to decorate even his simplest style with the grace and ornament of a pervading spirit of classical taste.

In the Introductions to these Ballads, there are occasional sketches of considerable merit;—such are the characters of Ulysses and of Helen, drawn with a combination of force, grace, and discernment, which mark the master-hand.

Upon one important point—namely the question, Was Homer a man or a myth?—Dr. Maginn has here given a full, explicit, and important opinion. We need not wonder that little is known of who probably flourished nine or ten centuries before the Christian era, when it is recollected how scanty is the personal information respecting Shakespeare, who died only two hundred and forty years ago. The writers of antiquity, who lived comparatively within traditional propinquity to Homer, agreed, as with one consent, that the Iliad and the Odyssey were the productions of a single mind. Some modern critics, at whose head Wolf, a German professor, placed himself, assume the theory of divided authorship—not only judging, from the difference of style, that the Iliad and the Odyssey must have been written by at least two distinct poets, but that neither of the whole of either of those poems was the work of one mind, but consisted of a variety of songs by several bards. It may be conceded that there is not an entire unity of plan in these poems (the Iliad, in particular, is deficient in this respect), but it is impossible to say, when we speak of epics probably composed before the art of writing books was known—when, perhaps, writing was even not in ordinary use—what alterations may have been made in poems handed down, at first and for a long time after, through the medium of memory only. That there is a difference in the style of the Iliad and that of the Odyssey can not be denied. But the subject of each epic appears to demand a difference. The Iliad, a heroic poem, treating of battle and chivalrous adventure, is naturally full of animation and boldness, while the Odyssey, relating the melancholy wanderings of Ulysses, on his return from Troy to Ithaca, is naturally pitched in a lower key and breathes the subdued tone of suffering. Nor is it improbable that one poem was composed in the spring of life, while the other was produced in more advanced years—this, of itself, would make the difference.

“The blind old man of Scio’s rocky isle,”

“It was reserved,” says Dr. Maginn, “for modern times to start the astounding doctrine that these divine poems are the productions of different hands. I am not ignorant of the talent, learning, and industry of Wolf: but I should as soon believe in four-and-twenty contemporary, or nearly contemporary, Homers, as in four-and-twenty contemporary Shakespeares, or Miltons, or Dantes.”

The previous English translations of Lucian are so indifferent that it is to be regretted that Dr. Maginn did not proceed farther with the version which he had commenced, the only examples of which are those forming the concluding portion of this volume. Had he chosen to devote himself to the task, con amore, we might have had something corresponding with the fidelity and spirit of Mitchell's translation—I might almost call it transfusion—of the satirical comedies of Aristophanes. The manner in which Maginn has put the “Timon” and “Charon” into English, gives assurance of sufficient ability to have conveyed the rest of Lucian into our own vernacular.

R. SHELTON MACKENZIE.

NEW YORK,
April 10, 1856.

CONTENTS.

HOMERIC BALLADS.

TRANSLATOR'S INTRODUCTION	PAGE 13
I. THE BATH OF ODYSSEUS.....	25
II. THE SONG OF THE TROJAN HORSE.....	39
III. THE RETURN OF THE CHIEFS FROM TROY.....	45
IV. THE CLOAK.....	83
V. THE DOG ARGUS.....	95
VI. THE FUNERAL OF ACHILLES.....	105
VII. THE INTRODUCTION OF PENELOPE.....	117
VIII. THE LAST APPEARANCE OF PENELOPE.....	125
IX. THE PROPHECY OF THEOCLYMENUS THE SEER.....	133
X. THE STORY OF THE SWINEHERD.....	143
XI. THE BEATEN BEGGARMAN	153
XII. THE FIRST APPEARANCE OF HELEN.....	167
XIII. THE GENEALOGY OF GLAUCUS.....	185
XIV. THE ARMING OF ACHILLES.....	197
XV. THE GENEALOGY OF ÆNEAS.....	207
XVI. NESTOR'S FIRST ESSAY IN ARMS.....	217

HOMERIC TRANSLATIONS.

I. THE WIFE OF JUNO.....	231
II. BACCHUS; OR, THE PIRATES.....	240
III. THE VISIT OF HELEN TO THE SCÆAN GATE....	245

COMEDIES OF LUCIAN.

I. TIMON; OR, THE MISANTHROPE.....	PAGE 255
II. CHARON; OR, THE LOOKERS-ON.....	293
III. MENIPPUS; OR, THE NECYOMANTIA.....	319
IV. MENIPPUS AND CHIRON.....	339

HOMERIC BALLADS.

DR. MAGINN'S
MISCELLANEOUS WRITINGS.

Homeric Ballads.

INTRODUCTION.

THE prevailing opinion in ancient times was, that the poems of Homer were written, or rather sung, in detached pieces. "Εγραψε δὲ, says Suidas, τὴν Ἰλιάδα, οὐχ ἅμα, οὐδὲ κατὰ τὸ συνεχές, καθάπερ συγκεῖται· ἀλλ' αὐτὸς μὲν ἑκαστὴν ῥαψωδίαν γράψας ἐν τῷ περινοσσεῖν τὰς πόλεις τροφῆς ἔνεκεν, ἀπέλιπεν. The common story is, that these scattered fragments were put into the order in which we now have them by Pisistratus. If he did so, well may the inscription said to have been engraven on his statue recite it as one of his proudest boasts.

—δς τὸν Ὅμηρον

Ἡθροισα, σποράδην τὸ πρὶν δειδόμενον.

All critical readers of Homer know, that the Scholia on Dionysius the Thracian, cited by Leo Allatius de Patriâ Homeri, Eustathius, Josephus, Aulus Gellius, Libanius, Ælian, tell the same story. Cicero believed it:—"Quis doctior iisdem illis temporibus, aut cujus eloquentia litteris instructior, quam Pisistrati, qui primus Homeri libros, confusos antea, sic disposuisse fertur, ut nunc habemus?"—De Oratore. The honor, however, is claimed for Lycurgus, that he brought the whole poems to Sparta from Ionia, about three hundred years before the days of Pisistratus. Plutarch, in his Life, tells us that Lycurgus gathered the fragments in Asia, and introduced them to the Greeks, among whom their renown was as yet obscure [δόξα — ἀμυνρά]. Ælian asserts, that he brought back the poems entire: 'Ὅψὲ δὲ Λυκοῦργος ὁ Λακεδαιμόνιος ἀθρόαν πρῶτον εἰς τὴν Ἑλλάδα ἐκέναι, τὴν Ὀμήρου ποίησιν. Solon, also, who preceded Pisistratus, has some share of the glory. Diogenes Laertius thinks the old legislator did more for Homer than his successor: Μᾶλλον οὖν Σόλων Ὀμηρον ἐφώτισεν ἢ Πεισίστρατος, ὥς φησι Διευχίδας ἐν πέμπτῳ Μεγαρικῶν.

No ancient author, I believe (except the Chorizontes, who maintained that the Iliad and Odyssey were written by different persons, and supported their argument by a piece of stupid criticism, which is found in the Venetian Scholia, Il. B. 356, and which I may hereafter take an opportunity of noticing), imagined that the works gathered by Pisistratus, or Solon, or Lycurgus, were not written by one man, and that one man named Homer. It was reserved for modern times to start the astounding doctrine that these divine poems are the production of different hands. I am not ignorant of the talent, learning, and industry of Wolf; but I should as soon believe in four and twenty contemporary, or nearly contemporary, Homers, as in four and twenty contemporary Shakespeares, or Miltons, or Dantes.

More than seven and twenty centuries have rolled away since Homer's time, according to his received date; and, in all languages, half-a-dozen names have not been produced who can be allowed to approximate to him. I firmly believe he has had but one equal, and even the greatness of his genius is disputed —by those, however, who, in my opinion, are not capable of appreciating either Shakespeare or Homer. I look only to the internal evidence of the poems themselves. As for external evidence, we know as much of Homer as the earliest Greek writer who mentions him. The poems were in all men's mouths before history or biography—far before criticism or antiquarianism, were thought of; and Herodotus himself tells nothing certain of their author.

The stories of scholiasts and grammarians, picked up from obscure and idle sources, are nothing more than guesses or fictions, on which no reliance can be placed. How little do we in reality know of Solon, or Lycurgus, or Pisistratus! It is highly probable that men, legislating for rude communities, would be anxious to furnish their people with the means of enjoying the strains of their national favorite, which were, besides, manuals of their religion and records of their ancient history; but they did no more than direct that the public reciters of the poems, the Rhapsodists, should sing them in order. Such was the regulation of Hipparchus, as we are informed by Plato; the same we are told of Solon. Pisistratus might, perhaps, have directed the details of an edition, as Ptolemy did some three centuries later; but I should as readily credit that the poems were written by different persons, whose labors were afterward gathered and soldered into a whole by a man of another age, as I should credit the Voyage of Ulysses. The thing is merely impossible;—

“And what's impossible can't be,
And never, never comes to pass.”

Scaliger, I believe, first started the hypothesis in his Poetics; a work, of which taste and judgment are in an inverse ratio to its learning; and Giambattista Vico, about the beginning of the last century, put it forth with much ability, in his Principi di Scienza Nuova. Wolf, at the end of the century, in his Prole-

gomena, collected all that learning and ingenuity could effect for the same purpose; and he has succeeded in convincing some scholars. Sir Walter Scott, I am told, used to call it the great literary heresy; and so most every one who looks upon the poems with critical or poetical eye. It is possible, nay, certain, that many lines, and some whole passages, are interpolated; and we must often agree with Payne Knight, though certainly not so far as to retrench with him about two thousand lines: but I think it possible, also, that the obelizing hand of Aristarchus sometimes went too far, and that many genuine lines were rejected. It may be true, for instance, that the adventure of Dolon, which forms the tenth book of the Iliad, may have been inserted, as Eustathius tells us, by order of Pisistratus; though I do not believe any thing of the kind: but that any mind but one, and that of the highest class of human mind, not only for the execution of details, but for the general ordering and regulating of a whole, originally directed the march of the poems, will appear incredible to those who have critically considered what epic poetry is.

So far from the Iliad being a collection or miscellany of ballads, composed at fits and starts by various minstrels, and then pieced together in ages afterward, the fact is, that it is the only epic poem ever written of which the unity is perfect and complete, and in which it would be impossible to disturb the order of the several parts of the poem without marring the regular and connected sequence of the entire. The Æneid is quite disconnected. The adventure of the first and fourth books has nothing to do with those of the remainder; it does not unite with them, far less influence them. The fifth book is a clumsy interpolation. Hardouin justly remarks, that the story of the sack of Troy, and the wanderings of Æneas, might have been as well told to Latinus or Evander as to Dido; and the funeral games would have been better performed in honor of Pallas than of Anchises, who makes no appearance in the poem until he is dead. And it was the less necessary to bestow these honors upon him, as he has the most magnificent of all of the books of the Æneid devoted to himself, viz. the sixth.

Milton well knew, though his commentators, including Addison, do not [Bentley, of course, excepted; but he was otherwise employed, in his wonderful edition of Milton], that the epic character could not be sustained throughout Paradise Lost; and, accordingly, he plainly tells us, in the ninth book, that he changes his notes to tragic. In the Iliad, on the contrary, the theme laid down is pursued, from beginning to end, with all the precision of a logical argument. The greatest warrior of the host assembled round Troy forsakes the cause in an excess of just anger. To show that his presence is not indispensable toward success, the King of Men determines on active operations at once without him, and musters his army for the fight. All the accidents of war ensue—battles, charges, retreats, duels, truces. The first day's combat has been such, that the Greeks feel it necessary to call in the spade to the assistance of the sword; and they intrench. Still more disastrous is the second day's battle. Heaven declares decidedly against them; and the victorious Hector bivouacs amid his watchfires in the field, waiting impatiently for morning to attack the hostile lines. Then is the indignant prophecy of Achilles remembered, that his arm would ere long be needed; and his intrepid cousin, his aged tutor, and the most eloquent chieftain of the host, are sent with rich gifts to supplicate him to return: but in vain. The vicissitudes of warfare again fill the scene. We have a night adventure, which certainly is not necessary in the story; but an epic poem and a romance are two different things. The main theme of the Iliad is war, and every accident of war should therein have a place. Among these, the employment of espionage and the surprise of an unguarded camp are prominent ; and, therefore, I pay no attention to the tradition already noticed, that the Dolonia was inserted by Pisistratus. Then follow sallies from the intrenchments, storming of walls, desperate defence of position after position, with gleams of success, followed by irretrievable defeat ; when the hero, moved by the tears of his friend, consents to allow his troops to rush to the rescue, but refuses to stir in person. For a time the rush is successful, and the assailants are driven back ; but the leader of the rescuing division is soon slain, and the rout is more hopeless than before. In triumph then rises before us Hector, radiant in gloriously won arms, the hero of the country, generous, true-hearted, noble, brave, about to receive, with swelling heart, the reward of a thousand valiant actions, by the prostrate subjugation and expulsion of the enemies of his land and lineage. His sword is raised to smite resistlessly, when upon the ears of his panic-stricken followers falls that battle-cry so fatally remembered which tells the appalling story that Achilles is in the field again. The rout is instantly checked ; and, in the morning, the furious and heart-broken warrior, reconciled to the king, and girt with armor forged by the god of Fire, sweeps raging to pitiless and indiscriminating slaughter. Ordinary war-adventures had been nearly exhausted ; and now the immortals come down to the fight, and the River-god rises to do battle in vain with a man. All obstacles are speedily flung aside, and at last the closing hour arrives. Under the walls of Troy, hand to hand, and all alone, meet the two champions of their people in a single combat, which death can only conclude ; and Hector falls. Then follow funeral-games and funeral-lamentations. Patroclus, and the chief who slew him, lie in a common death ; and the victor Achilles honors his fallen friend with all the pomp of martial chivalry, while amid the vanquished habitants of the beleaguered city bursts forth the wailing of women over the corpse of Hector, the gallant and the good.

If Pisistratus put this together, he is a far greater poet than any of the four and twenty ballad-mongers whose purpurei panni he gathered and joined. What is the ballad of the Bravery of Diomed, for example, compared to the poem of the Iliad? Harmonious verse, stirring incident, picturesque description, profound thought, are to be found in every page; but the power of producing these, lofty as it is, falls far short of that mens divini which can evolve such a work complete and absolute in all its numbers, with the beginning, middle, and end so closely, and as it were mathematically, linked together. Throughout the Iliad runs, also, one vein of thought, which it would be impossible to expect from unconnected writers. The battle-bards, working separately, could hardly be supposed to hold steadily in view a detestation of strife and quarrel, and yet that feeling strongly pervades the Iliad. Not only Nestor in the first book, and Phoenix in the ninth — each in his several way deprecates anger, and counsels the suppression of revengeful feelings; but even the hero himself breaks into a passionate execration of discord, praying that it might perish from amid gods and men, when he finds that the consequence of his own indulgence in wrath has been to stretch his brother in arms, the partner of his soul, in the gory dust. This moral follows from, not, as Bossu absurdly imagines, creates, the poem. But I am wasting my time. He who can not see that the Iliad was written by the same hand, from beginning to end, is past the help of couching; and I might as well attempt to describe the cartoons to a man in a state of physical blindness. Of the Odyssey I may speak hereafter.

Vico says, “Che perciò i popoli Greci cotanto contesero della di lui (Omero) patria, e’l vollero quasi tutti lor cittadino; perche essi popoli Greci furono quest Omero.”

There may be in this sentence either sense or nonsense. Nonsense in all its altitudes, if it be intended to maintain that what is the popular fancy can be best expressed by the people ; or, as Vico phrases it, that the popoli Greci were Omero ; for the contrary is the fact. It is the Omeri—the Homers—who ultimately lead, and make the popoli Greci. Sense, if it be intended to say that there is no Homer without the un-school-masterlike education of observation and memory. I should readily concede to Vico, or Wolf, that many a story is contained in the Homeric poems which their author had heard and embodied. “To us,” he says, “the glory—the report only—has come down. We know nothing of it.” Thamyris, Demodocus, and other illustrious singers, are perpetually quoted. Nothing appears to me more absurd than the controversy about the reality of the events of the Iliad. It is highly probable that the tribes on the opposite coasts of the Archipelago had many a piratical war, ante Helenam, occasioned, in pretext, by the carrying off of a lady—in reality, by the pleasure of living a life of tumult and plunder. For Bryant and his school I feel no respect ; but just as much as I do for those who made it a matter of orthodoxy to believe in the Trojan war.

I am well aware of the theory of Herbert of Hilga in his work called Nimrod, after the mighty hunter. Ingenious it is, and supported by a world of talent and erudition ; but I think Homer is to be read literally. Some actual war, which appeared to him remarkable, suggested the song. It having been so suggested, genius did the rest. The four and twenty minstrels I must again dismiss, and agree with Aristotle, that θεσπέσιος ἄν φανεῖη Ὅμηρος παρὰ τοὺς ἄλλους (Poet xxiv.). Divine is Homer—[the one Homer] above all others. The same Aristotle, who made for the use of Alexander the Great the most famous of the editions of Homer, thereby for ever ennobling the office of editor, also declares that the poet surpasses all, not only in style (λέξει), but in the intellectual faculty (διανοία)—not merely in the melody of versification and the choice of words, but in the philosophical arrangement and consideration of the course of his poems. And Aristotle was a man worthy of all the worship ever bestowed upon him even by the blindest of his devotees. They might not have known why they worshipped him, and often assigned absurd or false reasons for their idolatry; but they were not substantially wrong when they bowed down before the ipse dixit.

I have written more than I intended, and shall only say, that my own opinion is that the Iliad and Odyssey are, with no very important differences, as we now have them, the work of one man, who dwelt on the Asiatic side of the Archipelago, or in the islands—perhaps Scio. I do not believe that he was a beggar-man, or a singing man, or a blind man. I do not think his name was Homer; and I look upon the derivations of that word which we find in the Greek scholiasts, men utterly ignorant of the principles of etymology, and the pedants who followed them, as mere trash. The meaning is to be sought elsewhere. I think he wrote or spoke his great poems as wholes, in Asia, and that they came over to Hellas piece by piece, after having filled the east with their fame; and that by the great men of Athens, or Sparta, they were gathered, not in the sense of making them into poems, but of re-making them. They were, both before their importation and afterward, sung in scraps, no doubt, just as Shakespeare or Milton is quoted by us in scraps. We do not sing our great poets—the Greeks did; but “To be or not to be?” or “Hail, holy light!” indicate to us fragments of Hamlet or Paradise Lost, just in the same way as the various “headings” of the pieces sung by the Rhapsodists indicated fragments of the Iliad and the Odyssey; and it would be as wise to consider, as the original arranger of the Shakespearean or Miltonic poems in their present shape, the industrious compiler who should restore them from Readers, or Speakers, or Elegant Extracts, as to confer the honor of making the poems of Homer on Pisistratus. If Wolf had tried to make an epic poem out of the abundant ballads of his native land, he would have found how hard was the task assigned by him to the Athenian prince. It might not be unamusing to prove, in the manner of Wolf, that there were some dozen of Sir Walter Scotts. On Vico's principle, it would not be hard to do so. Sir Walter wove together the traditions of Scotland, and therefore the Scottish tribes furono questo Gualtero.

But of this more than enough. I am about to split Homer again into the rhapsodical ballads, not from which he was made, but which were taken from him. I am sorry that Chapman, whose version must be considered the most Homeric ever attempted in our language, did not apply to the Odyssey the fourteen-syllable verse, which had succeeded so well in the Iliad. There appears to me greater opportunity for its flowing use in the more discursive poem; and Chapman had by no means the same command of the ten-syllabic distich. I have, however, long considered it as certain that the only metre in which the Iliad and Odyssey, as whole poems, can be adequately translated into English is the Spenserian. I have made considerable progress with such a translation, and some time I think I may finish it.* Why I am not sure of so doing, will be found out by any one who takes the trouble of consulting the seventh Satire of Juvenal.

Ælian enumerates the principal favorites of the ancients.

“Ὅτι τὰ Ὀμήρου ἔπη πρότερον διήρημενα ἦδον οἱ παλαιοὶ οἷον ἔλεγον τὴν ἐπὶ Ναυσὶ μάχην, καὶ Δολωνίαν τινὰ, καὶ Ἀριστείαν Ἀγαμέμνονος, καὶ Νεῶν Κατάλογον, καὶ πον Πατρόκλειαν, καὶ

* No fragments of the translation here spoken of were found among Dr. Maginn's papers. At one time, he had an opinion that Homer might best be translated in the measure of “Marmion” (the rapidity of which is so well adapted to the narrative of chivalric deeds), and actually executed some of the Homeric episodes in that metre. They appear in the present volume.—M.

Λύτρα, καὶ ἐπὶ Πατρόκλῳ Ἄθλα, καὶ Ὀρκίων ἀφάνισιν. Ταῦτα ὑπὲρ τῆς Ἰλιάδος. Ὑπὲρ δὲ τῆς ἐτέρας, τὰ ἐν Πύλῳ, καὶ τὰ ἐν Λακεδαίμονι, καὶ Καλυψοῦς ἄντρον, καὶ περὶ τὴν Σχεδίαν Ἀλκίνοῦ ἀπολόγου, Κυκλωπίαν, καὶ Νεκυίαν, καὶ τὰ τῆς Κίρκης, Νίπτρα, Μνηστῆρων φόνον, τὰ ἐν ἀγρῶ, τὰ ἐν Λαέρτῳ.—Lib. xlii. 14.

“The ancients sang the poems of Homer in detached portions. Such as the Battle at the Ships (Iliad, Book XIII.), the Adventure of Dolon (X.), the Bravery of Agamemnon (XI.), the Catalogue of the Ships (II.), the Adventure of Patroclus (XVI.), the Ransoming [of the body of Hector] (XXIV.), the Games over Patroclus (XXIII.), the Breaking of the Oaths (IV.): these from the Iliad. From the other poem: The Adventures in Pylos (Odyssey, Book III.), the Adventures in Lacedemon (IV.), the Cave of Calypso (V.), the Raft [which Ulysses constructed to leave Calypso’s island] (V.), the Tales told to Alcinous (VIII.), the Adventures with the Cyclops (IX.), the Visit to the Dead (XI.), the Adventures with Circe (X.), the Bath [of Ulysses, when he was discovered by his nurse] (XIX.), the Slaying of the Suitors (XXII.), the Adventures in the Country [with Eumæus] (XIV.), the Visit to Laertes (XXIV.).”

Of these I have selected, as my commencing chaunt, the Niptra [or The Bath of Odysseus]. I have followed the ordinarily received Greek text.

I.

The Bath of Odysseus.

FROM THE ODYSSEY.—BOOK XIX. 386-507.

ODYSSEUS, in the disguise of a ragged beggar-man, has an interview with his wife, who does not recognise him. He tells her, as usual, a false story,

ἤρπυια πολλὰ λέγον ἐπύμοισιν ὁμοίαν

in which he represents himself as an acquaintance of her absent lord. She asks a description of his person, which he gives with much minuteness, and thereby convinces her of the truth of his assertion. She instantly extends the kindest hospitality to him, and orders Euryclea, his old nurse, to bathe his feet. The nurse complies the more willingly, as she is struck by the likeness of the poor stranger to Odysseus.

VOL. IV.—2

The Bath of Odysseus.

I.

A CALDRON bright the old woman bore, 386
To wash the stranger's feet ;
Of water cold she poured in store —
Then, to temper the bath, she filled it o'er
With a stream of boiling heat.

II.

By the fire Odysseus took his place ;
But he quickly turned him round
In the darksome shadow to hide his face,
For he thought that his nurse's hand would trace
The scar of an ancient wound.

III.

And he feared that she might with outcry rash 390
His presence there betray ;
And scarcely had she begun to wash,
Ere she was aware of the grisly gash
Above his knee that lay.

IV.

It was a wound from a wild boar's tooth,
All on Parnassus' slope,
Where he went to hunt in the days of his youth
With his mother's sire, with whom, in sooth, 395
In craft could no man cope.

V.

By Hermes' grace, with oaths and lies
 His fraudful game he played ;
 And the god, for the blazing sacrifice
 Of kids' and lambkins' savory thighs,
 Lent him his ready aid.

VI.

From Parnassus erst on a journey gone,
 To Ithaca's isle he came ;
 There he found that his daughter had borne a son, 400
 Whom they placed his grandsire's knees upon,
 As he sate at the board, his supper done,
 And they asked him the boy to name.

VII.

And thus spoke out Euryclea fair,
 The infant's nurse was she —
 " Antolycus, name thy daughter's heir,
 Whom thou long hast sought with many a prayer,
 Now lying upon thy knee."

VIII.

" Daughter and son," the old man said. 406
 " What name I bestow, receive ;
 As many a man, o'er earth wide-spread,
 Was ODIOS to me when I hither sped,
 Be ODYSSEUS the name I give.*

* I have endeavored to preserve the pun, if it be right to call it one, as well as I can. It is probable that the derivations of the Greek names of early times are to be sought in very different quarters from those to which we are referred by the grammarians ; but, in the present case, Homer seems to be repeating some well-known story. There is nothing improbable in

IX.

"By such a surname my grandson call ; 409
And when manhood's years shall come,
Send him to visit the ample hall,
Where his mother was born, in Parnassus tall,
And there I shall give him share of all,
And send him rejoicing home."

supposing that Autolyeus might wish to mark his feelings at the time of the birth of a grandson by the name he gave him. Instances from the Scriptures will occur at once. The wife of Phinehas, bringing forth a son amid the ruin of her house, called him Ichabod—"where is the glory"—in melancholy mark that he was born when prosperity had departed. So Leah and Rachel named their children; and, if we go further, so did Eve. I give the version of Chapman, as it affords a specimen of his manner, part translation, part comment;—

“Daughter and son-in-law (said he), let then
The name that I shall give him stand with men;
Since I arriv'd here, at the hour of pain,
In which mine own kind entrails did sustain
Moan for my daughter's yet unended throes:
And when so many men's and women's woes
In joint compassion met, of human birth,
Brought forth t'attend the many feeding earth;
Let Odvssens be his name, as one——”

He is wrong, as his note also shows, in the meaning he affixes to ὀδυσσάμενος. Autolycus had no sentimental fancies about him. He was full of hatred against many men and women, whom I suppose he, with the assistance of Mercury, had cheated, and who had found him out; and he intended that his odium against mankind should be perpetuated in the name Odyseus.

The second sigma in the participle ὄντοσάμενος, and the name Ὀδυσσεύς, is a grammatical or prosodial insertion, in order to make the syllable long by position. Ὀδυσσεύς is often spelt with a single sigma, as in this very passage, in v. 409, 416, 452, 456, and a hundred places beside. Dunbar contends that it is useless, as the metrical ietus would make the syllable long without any alteration of spelling. But, as the complaint of Martial still holds good—

“Dicunt Evarion tamen poëtae,
Sed Græci quibus est nihil negatum,
Et quos ἄοες ἄοες decet sonare;
Nobis non licet esse tam disertis,
Qui musas colimus severiores—”

X.

Seeking these treasures rich and rare,
 Odysseus left his land ;
 To Autolyeus' castle he made repair,
 And his grandsire, and his uncles there, 415
 Hailed him with friendly hand.

XI.

And the heart of his mother's mother was blest
 With her dear grandson's sight ;
 Closely she clasped him to her breast,
 And many a kiss on his cheek she prest,
 And on his eyes so bright.

XII.

Then Autolyeus told his sons to spread
 A table for the feast ;
 And willing they did as their father said,
 And a five-year-old steer was to slaughter led
 In honor of their guest. 420

and we can not be allowed to vary the quantity of our words ad libitum, I have chosen to spell the name always Odysseus, accenting, according to the English analogy, on the second syllable. I strongly recommended all translators of Greek poetry to take the Greek, not the Latin names. The Roman deities, Juno, Minerva, Mercurius, Vulcanus, Ceres, Mars, Venus, &c., are by no means mythologically identical with Hērē, Athēnē, Hērmes, Hēphæstos, Deméter, Arēs, Aphroditē, &c.; and, surely, the Greek words are at least as musical as the Latin. Aias is better than Ajax; the Aiante, or, if the dual is not allowable in a translation, the Aiantes than the Ajaces, or the Ajaxes; and Odysseus is as good as Ulysses. The late Greek tumults have familiarised us to the form. Jupiter (which is nothing but a different spelling of Ζεύς-τάρη) is perhaps the only exception I should admit; and no English rhyme-maker can afford to part with Jove, whom, therefore, we must vote to be the same as the unmanageable Zeus. Of course, I do not recommend mere literal changes of forms to which we have been accustomed, such as substituting os for us, Menelaos for Melenaus, or ai for æ (as Aineas for Æneas), or to alter Priam, Hecuba, Alexander, Parnassus, and other such almost household words, closer to their original; but in all other cases.—
 W. M.

XIII.

They flay off its hide, they dress the inside,
 They cut it up joint by joint ;
 With skill well tried, the flesh they divide,
 And, sliced into steaks, to the fire applied,
 Pierced on the toaster's point.*

XIV.

And when at the fire it was fully done, 423
 Due portions they gave to all ;
 They sate at the meal until set of sun,
 And when they rose, complaint was there none .
 Of the well-shared festival.

* I hope I have translated this favorite culinary passage correctly. It appears to me that the meat was roasted, not roasted. The animal was broken up, and the joints cut into steaks, which were stuck upon forks—five-pronged forks, as we are sometimes told—and held to the fire. The translation of this passage has been very tormenting to those who have set up in their own minds a different standard of epic taste from that which was erected by Homer. The last French translation I have seen, of 1812, thus daintily paraphrases the passage in the first book of the Iliad:—"On consacre les victimes, on les égorge, et le temple est inondé de leur sang. Les cuisses sont coupées ; le prêtre lui-même les fait brûler sur l'autel, et offre des libations. Déjà l'offrande est consumée par le feu sacré, on fait cuire la chair des victimes, des tables sont dressées, le sacrificateur et les Grecs se rangent autour, et tous dans un commun repas goûtent les douceurs de l'égalité."

This is a pleasant petit souper. I have never seen the first French translation of "Homère poète Grec, et grand historiographe, by Maistre Jehan Samxon, licencié en loys, Lieutenant du Bailey de Touraine, en son siège de Chastillon sur Indre," written, it is supposed, by order of Francis I., and printed, as we are duly informed, on the 26th of September, 1530 ; but in that of Du Souhait, of 1617, we have what I think is better than the nice trimmings of the version of 1812:—"Les cuisses des victimes immolées estant totalement consumées, premièrement on mit griller les trippes et les entrailles sur les charbons, les mangerent à leur desieuné, les autres membres furent mis en pièces, et tranchez par morceaux les mettant à la broche, et les faisant rôtir en diligence, puis, estant rôtis, on les mit sur table pour la refection des assistans qui benvoiant les uns aux autres pourtant des coupes."—W. M.

XV.

When the sun in night had hid his ray,
They sank in slumber sound ;
Until the rose-fingered queen of day
Sprang from the dawn where her birthplace lay,
And wakened man and hound.

XVI.

And all at once the chase pursued
Grandson, and son, and sire ;
They climbed the mountain crowned with wood,
And soon in the windswept lawns they stood,
Whence Parnassus' heights aspire.

XVII.

Uprose the sun from the deep, deep stream
Of ocean's gentle swell,
And the fields were warmed by his genial gleam,
When the huntsmen, by light of the matin beam,
Entered the woody dell.

XVIII.

First through the covert burst the pack, 435
Fast following on the trace ;
Came the Autolycei at their back,
Nor did they find Odysseus slack,
With spear in hand, to join the attack,
Or urge along the chase.

XIX.

There 'neath thick covering branches laid,
A huge boar had his lair ;

So dense the foliage of that glade, 440
No wind had ever pierced its shade,
On moist wing wafted there.

XX.

There never in the midday heat
Was the warm sunbeam seen ;
So sheltered was that close retreat,
That never did a rain-storm beat
Athwart its leafy screen.

XXI.

And deep all round, the thick-strew ground 443
With leaves was covered o'er ;
But the trampling sound of man and hound,
All bursting in with sudden bound,
Aroused the couchant boar.

XXII.

With bristling back, and eye of flame,
In the brake he took his stand ;
To the onset first Odysseus came,
Raising his spear with steady aim,
Poised in his sinewy hand.

XXIII.

Ready he stood right valiantly
But, ere he had time to strike,
The tusk of the boar, more prompt than he,
Deep through his flesh, above the knee,
Ripped with a stroke oblique.

XXIV.

Sharp was the wound, but it touched no bone ;
Odysseus then made a thrust ;
Through the right shoulder his spear has gone,
Through the off side piercing its point has shone ;
And the slaughtered beast, with bellowing moan,
Sunk dead into the dust.

454

XXV.

The Autolycei looked to the boar that was slain,
And their nephew's gash they bound.
They stanch'd the black blood by a magic strain,
And brought him home to their sire again,
And they healed him of his wound.

XXVI.

With presents rich he was sent away,
When his cure was all complete ;
Joyful they parted, both he and they,
And to Ithaca's isle he bent his way,
His parents glad to greet.

460

XXVII.

And much of his wound they wished to know,
And his manner he did recount,
How a white-tusked boar had dealt the blow,
While hunting he chanced with his uncles to go,
Upon Parnassus' mount.

XXVIII.

Well was it known by that woman old,
The instant she touched the scar ;

Down dropped his foot from her slackened hold,
Upset was the laver, and over it roll'd,
Clanging with brazen jar.

469

XXIX.

All on the floor did the water pour.
The old woman's heart beat high;
With joy at once, and with sorrow sore,
Her soul was filled, and, brimming o'er,
Tears dimmed her aged eye.

XXX.

And her voice in her throat was prisoned fast,
But ere long the words outburst;
Her suppliant hand to his chin she passed,
And she said, "Thou art he — I know thee at last —
The darling boy I nurst!

XXXI.

"I knew thee not, Odysseus, till Thy skin my hand had pressed."
Then where the queen was seated still Cast she her eyes, with eager will
To tell who was the guest —

475

XXXII.

To say that her husband home returned,
Now sate within her bower.
But her looks Penelope nought discerned,
For the thoughts of her mind elsewhere were turned,
By Athené's watchful power.

XXXIII.

Odysseus checked her tongue's career ;
Her throat his right hand caught ;
Then with his left he drew her near, 480
And "Nurse," said he, in tone severe,
"Dost thou my ruin plot ?

XXXIV.

"Thou plot my ruin ! by whose teat
My infancy was fed ;
When homeward to my native seat,
After twenty years of toil and sweat,
My wandering course has led !

XXXV.

"Now, since to thee my coming here 485
By a god's aid is known,
Breathe it to none that I am near ;
For, mark me, with attentive ear,
Threatening what shall be done —

XXXVI.

"If, by Heaven's help, beneath me die
The suitors whom I hate,
Not even to thee, my nurse, shall I
Yield quarter, while around me lie
The handmaids, slain un pityingly,
Within my palace gate." 490

XXXVII.

Him answered thus Euryclea good :
"What hast thou said, my son ?

Firm and inflexible of mood,
I hold thy secret, unsubdued,
As steel or solid stone,

XXXVIII.

“But, heed my words. If Heaven should tame 495
The suitors b’neath thy hand,
Then throughout the household shall I name
The handmaids who wrought disgrace and shame,
And those who blameless stand.”

XXXIX.

“Needless, my nurse,” the king replied,
“That this should to me be told;
They all shall be noted, and duly tried. 500
As for the rest, let the gods provide :
But do thou deep silence hold.”

XL.

She went to prepare the bath anew,
For the first was split all round :
He was bathed and anointed in manner due ;
To the fire then closer the stool he drew,
And over his knee his rags he threw,
In order to hide the wound. 507

II.

The Song of the Trojan Horse.

SUNG TO ULYSSES BY THE MINSTREL DEMODOCUS.

FROM THE ODYSSEY.—Book VIII. 477-534.

[DEMODOCUS had, in the morning, sung a ballad of the contention between Achilles and Ulysses, an incident in that war, "the glory of which had then reached the spacious heaven." It produced a deep effect on the feelings of the unknown guest. He was obliged to cover his face with his garment, to conceal his bursting tears; and, when the song was done, he wiped off the token of his sorrow, and made a reverential libation to the gods. Demodocus was again called upon to sing by the Phæacian nobles; and again Ulysses, anticipating that the theme would a second time be taken from those adventures in which he had borne so conspicuous a part, could not control his feelings. Alcinous, by whom he sate, perceived his agitation; and making the remark that they had enough of minstrelsy for the present, proposed that they should leave the table and commence the sports of the day. He rightly conjectured that something in the song had affected the stranger, though at first, with much delicacy, he does not even allude to it. After dinner, Ulysses, with that strange waywardness which all men have occasionally felt, can not refrain from demanding another ballad on the Trojan war, deeply as the former reference had shaken him. The effect is the same as before; he yields again to a passion of tears, excited by the memory of bygone days, and of companions in gallant actions scattered or slain. Alcinous now thinks it time that he should openly interfere. He has no further substitute to offer instead of the lay of Demodocus, and he plainly tells the company that the minstrel must cease because his song gives pain to the stranger. With the ease and kind-hearted refinement of a true gentleman—for such is the character admirably supported by Alcinous—he calls upon the unknown whose skill and vigor in the games of the day had made a most favorable impression on prince and people, candidly to declare who he was, and why he is so grievously afflicted when he hears of the fate of the Argives and the Danaï, and of Troy. “It was the work of the gods,” says Homer, speaking through Alcinous, with the undoubting conviction that his own immortal poems would fulfil the prophecy, “who doomed the men to destruction, that it might be matter of song to the people of future time.” So called upon, Ulysses discloses himself in a short speech of surpassing grace and dignity, which serves as an exordium to a tale of the most wondrous beauty ever conceived by the human imagination—

Speciosa delinc miracula promit,
Antiphaten, Scyllanque, et cum Cyclope Charybdim.

Miracles they are, indeed, of enchanting verse, which, whether we take them as legends intended to be believed literally, or as allegories veiling a hidden truth, captivate the fancy, arouse the intellect, and feed the eye with a long succession of ever-varying pictures, filling the mind with endless trains of thought and meditation.]

The Song of the Trojan Horse.

I.

“HERE, herald,” he said, “take this portion of meat, 477
And bear it from me, that the minstrel may eat;
Although sad is my heart, yet I gladly will give
The honor that bards should from all men receive;
For honor and reverence should ever belong
To the loved of the Muses, the framers of song.”
So spoke forth Odysseus—the herald obeyed,
And his gift was at once by Demodocus laid.* 483

II.

The minstrel received it, rejoicing in heart,
Then the feast was begun, and they all took a part;
And when sated with meat and with wine was each guest,
By Odysseus the singer again was addressed:
“The lot of no other I honor as thine;
For the Muse taught thy lay, or Apollo divine;
Thy song of th’ Achivi tells truly and well,
How they toiled in the wars, how they fought and they fell. 490

III.

We would think ’mid those deeds that thou present hast been
Or hast heard them from one who the combat had seen.
Be the famed HORSE OF WOOD now renowned in thy lays,
Which Athené assisted Epéus to raise. 495

* This ballad is translated into the anapæstic metre, and Maginn, when exception was taken to it, on the ground of its ponderosity, contended “that the metre is a good ballad measure, when properly managed,” and mentioned Scott’s “Lochinvar,” and Campbell’s “Lochiel” as fine specimens.—M.

How brought by Odysseus, with stratagem bold,
It was placed, full of men, within Ilion's stronghold.
This tale truly sing; and my tongue shall maintain,
O'er the earth, that a god has inspired thy sweet strain."

IV.

The minstrel began as the godhead inspired,
He sang how their tents the Argives had fired, 500
And over the sea in trim barks bent their course,
While their chiefs with Odysseus were closed in the horse,
Mid the Trojans, who had that fell engine of wood
Dragged on, till in Troy's inmost turret it stood;
There long did they ponder in anxious debate,
What to do with the steed, as around it they sate. 505

V.

Then before them three several counsels were laid,
Into pieces to hew it by edge of the blade;
Or to draw it forth thence to the brow of a rock,
And downward to fling it with shivering shock;
Or, shrined in the tower, let it there make abode,
As an offering to ward off the anger of God. 510
The last counsel prevailed, for the moment of doom,
When the town held the horse, upon Ilion had come.

VI.

The Argives in ambush awaited the hour,
When slaughter and death on their foes they should shower.
When it came from their hollow retreat rushing down,
The sons of the Achivi smote sorely the town. 515
Then scattered, on blood and on ravaging bent,
Through all parts of the city chance-guided they went,

And he sang how Odysseus at once made his way
To where the proud domes of Deiphobus lay.

VII.

With bold Menelaus he thitherward strode,
In valor an equal to war's fiery god. 519
There fierce was the fight, dread the deeds that were done,
Till, aided by Pallas, the battle he won.

So sang the rapt minstrel the blood-stirring tale,
But the cheek of Odysseus waxed deathly and pale ;
While the song warbled on of the days that were past,
His eyelids were wet with the tears falling fast.

VIII.

As wails the lorn bride, with her arms clasping round
Her own beloved husband, laid low on the ground ;
From the town, with his people, he sallied out brave,
His country, his children, from insult to save.
She sees his last gasping, life ready to part,* 525
And she flings herself on him, pressed close to her heart.
Shrill she screams o'er the dying, while enemies near Beat her shoulders and back with the pitiless spear.

IX.

They bear her away — as a slave she must go ; 529
For ever a victim of toil and of wo.
Soon wastes her sad cheek with the traces of grief :
Sad as hers showed the face of famed Ithaca's chief.
But none saw the tear-drops which fell from his eye,
Save the king at the board who was seated close by ;
And Alcinous watched him, and noted alone,
How deep from his breast came the heavy-sent groan. 534

III.

The Return of the Chiefs from Troy.

THERE is, in my opinion—I do not pretend that it is good, as old Montaigne says, but it is mine—no test by which we can better decide whether a translator or critic understands Homer, than by his appreciation of the character of Nestor. I make no allusion to such criticism as those of Scaliger, in his Poetics: “Nestor in primo Iliados loquax; in septimo non minus; in quarto odiosus; in undecimo obtundit; in penultimo etiam nugatur;” for they are merely absurd. In the passages referred to, the old soldier is introduced, with the most perfect propriety, to promote concord among his brother generals, or to stimulate his brother campaigners to action, by recitals of what had been done in former days by chiefs, whose memory all his hearers revered, and of whom he was now the sole surviving companion; or to display what were the true principles of tactics or charioteering—war being the principal business, athletic games being the principal amusement, of the ages in which he flourished. In judging of those times, let it never be forgotten that there were no newspapers or histories; and old men were obliged to perform the duty which is performed by “the folio of four pages,” for our daily gossip; and by the folio, quarto, octavo, or duodecimo, of many pages, for our more permanent leading or misleading, as the case may occur. I shall not stop to discuss here the epical question, what proportion dialogue should hold toward action. Another opportunity will occur; and the question does not particularly affect Nestor.

Shaking off such critics as Scaliger, it may appear unreasonable if I am not better satisfied with the opinion of the ancients themselves, whose knowledge of the language was infinitely greater than any thing which the most eminent of modern scholars can pretend to possess, and whose qualifications for entering into the spirit of Homer's characters would, at first sight, appear to be far superior to ours. There could not be any difficulty in making a parade of extracts from Greek and Roman writers, to prove that they considered Nestor to be nothing more than an old speech-maker, or story-teller, whose perpetual talkativeness is to be excused by his age and fluent sweetness of tongue. The often quoted passage of Cicero, in De Senectute, will be sufficient: "Videtisne ut apud Homerum sæpissime Nestor de virtutibus suis prædicat? Tertiam enim jam ætatem hominum videbat: nec erat verendum ne vera de se prædicans nimis videretur aut insolens aut loquax; etenim, ut ait Homerus, ex ejus lingua melle dulcior fluebat oratio." Excuses of the same kind, for the loquacity of the old man eloquent, will be found in every commentator, from the days when criticism began, to those of the last edition.

It appears to me that apologies were never more needlessly thrown away. Nestor, in the Iliad, is by no means the mere prater, for whose talking we are to find excuses. He is emphatically the advising officer of the army; and he never shrinks from joining in the field the dashing movements he has recommended in council. Those who, in after-ages, took up the Homeric characters, distorted them to caricature. Because Nestor was old, they made him a dotard—because Ajax was large, they made him a blockhead—because Achilles was restless in fair combat, they made him invulnerable—because Ulysses was wily, they made him a coward. They caught at the one prominent point in the character, and worked it out as second-hand story-tellers will do, keeping that point only in mind, and adapting it to circumstances far different from those with which it was invested in the original. Let us, therefore, forgetting all that has been since written about Nestor, see what he does in Homer.

A fierce dispute between Agamemnon and Achilles commences the Iliad. Their language gradually becomes more and more irritating: at last Achilles is tempted to draw upon his general. No one ventures to interfere, until the angry hero, flinging his staff of authority in a rage upon the ground, sits down with a fierce menace that he shall no more lend his aid to the war. The quarrel of words has now come to its height, and Nestor jumps up at once to check its further progress—to dissuade Agamemnon from offering the threatened affront, and to induce Achilles to withdraw his threat of retiring. Both acknowledge the respect they owe to Nestor; but both, being in a passion, decline acceding to his advice. The old man has offered it prematurely. Ulysses, the πολέμητις, does not jump up while the two chiefs are boiling with anger. We see him afterward endeavoring to appease in due season. He bears the proposals of reconciliation in the ninth book: he it is who finally rivets it in the nineteenth. There is a fine discrimination of character between the impetuous old warrior, who has through a long life acted upon his impulse, and the wily observer, who has “known the minds of many men,” and therefore takes his time. The attempt of Nestor to reconcile being fruitless, we hear nothing more of him during the remainder of the book. The contrast between him and Ulysses, which is carried on throughout the Iliad, is here strongly marked at the outset. In spite of his age and eloquence, Nestor is not sent to take back Chryseis, to satisfy her father, and appease the god. That office is given to Ulysses. Nestor's single speech, in the first Iliad, is, in its kind, a model of perfection. I know that it has been subjected to the keen carping of Voltaire; and I know, also, that the criticism of Voltaire, if it be intended for sincere criticism, is utterly worthless. His translation of the speech is a mere mockery—a mockery the more inexcusable, as he has translated with much care, though not much fidelity, the speech of the Cacique Colocolo, from the Arancana of Ercilla, which he has the taste to prefer to that of Nestor. As his version is short, I shall, for the convenience of comparison, give it here with the original.

VOLTAIRE.

Essais sur la Poésie Epique. Tom. x. p. 396. Ed. Kehl.

Quelle satisfaction sera-ce aux Troyens, lorsqu'ils entendront parler de vos discordes!

HOMER. Il. A. 254.

ὦ πόποι, ἦ μέγα πένθος Ἀχαιῖδ᾽ ἀγαῖαν ἰάνει.
 Ἥ κεν γηθήται Πριάμος, Πριάμοιο τε παῖδες,
 Ἄλλοι τε Τρῶες μέγα κεν κεχαροῖατο θυμῷ,
 εἰ σφῶϊν τάδε πάντα πυθοῖατο μαρναμένοισιν,
 οἳ περὶ μὲν βοὺλῃν Δαναῶν, περὶ δ' ἐστὶ μάχεσθαι.

So far from this poor conversational prose being a fair representation of the glowing original, it does not even express its sense. Nestor appeals to the angry chiefs, reminding them of the great grief they are spreading over their native land, and of the equally great joy it must diffuse, not merely among les Troyens, but among their rival princes, Priam and his house; and thence downward among all the men of Troy. It will be of no common order—no mere satisfaction; deeply will they rejoice at heart, because they will be well able to appreciate the fatal consequences of a feud among men whom they have long felt to be supereminent in the council and the field. Never was compliment more naturally or more dexterously introduced; and, therefore, Voltaire omits it altogether.

VOLTAIRE.

Votre jeunesse doit respecter mes années et se soumettre à mes conseils. J'ai vu autrefois des héros supérieurs à vous. Non, mes yeux ne verront jamais des hommes semblables à l'invincible Pirithous, au brave Cineus, au divin Thésée, &c.

HOMER.

Ἄλλ᾽ πίθεσοθ' ἄμφω δὲ νεωτέρω ἐστὼν ἐμεῖο.
 Ἦδη γὰρ ποτ' ἐγὼ καὶ ἀρείοσιν, ἥπερ ὑμῖν,
 Ἀνδράσιν ὠμίλησα, καὶ οὐποτέ μ' οἶγ' ἀθίριζον.
 Οὐ γάρ ποι τοίους ἴδον ἀνέρας, οὐδὲ ἴδωμαι,
 Οἷον Πειρίθοον τε, Δρύαντά τε, ποιμένα λαῶν,
 Καινέα τ', Ἐξάδιόν τε καὶ ἀντίθεον Πολύφημον,
 [Θησέα τ' Διγείδην, ἐπιείκελον ἀθανάτοισι']

This pretended translation is merely fraudulent. Voltaire had determined to represent the speech of Nestor as "habile présomptueux, et impoli," and suited his version accordingly. The Greek says, "Be persuaded—let me persuade you, because you both are younger than I am;" the French, "Your youth ought to respect my years." In the original we have not a word claiming respect—not a word of authority; it is all persuasion, the right of urging which is claimed on the ground of age—an advantage which no one desires to dispute. "J'ai vu autrefois des héros supérieurs à vous," is nothing like the spirit of the Greek. Nestor wishes to remind them, that his many years have not been passed remote from the scenes of war. "I have," he says, "campaigned with [ὠμίλησα, not vu] men braver even that you" [καὶ ἀρείοσιν ἥπερ ὑμῖν. Eustathius's reading ἡμῖν, is quite inadmissible. The archbishop contends, and Wolf agrees with him, that ἡμῖν would be less offensive to the angry princes, and more in character. Just the contrary. Nestor could not be so absurd as to imagine that, at the time he was speaking, he could be supposed to be a fit antagonist for the glorious heroes of old. Nobody supposed it. Agamemnon and Achilles, in the pride and vigor of manhood and practised bravery, might have been thought compeers with Pirithous and the others whom he extols: Nestor now was out of the question. “Braver than we” is the real vanity. How we apples swim! “Braver than you—even you,” is a compliment], “and they did not despise me; i. e. they honored me with the highest attention.” This is omitted, which is unfair. The omission indicated by the “&c.” is equally unfair, because the suppressed passage gives the reason why the speaker sets the old warriors in higher price than those of his present time. They had fought with the most tremendous antagonists, the mountain-dwelling Centaurs, whom they utterly destroyed. None who heard the speech would refuse to admit, that those who succeeded in such desperate warfare were men whose names should ever be held in reverence, or accept them as authorities worthy of most deferential quotation.

VOLTAIRE.

J’ai été à la guerre avec eux, et quoique je fusse jeune, mon éloquence persuasive avait du pouvoir sur leurs esprits. Ils écoutaient Nestor; jeunes guerriers, écoutez donc les avis que vous donne ma vieillesse.

HOMER.

Καὶ μὲν τοῖσιν ἐγὼ μεθομίλειον ἐκ Πόλου ἐλθὼν
 Τηλόθεν ἐξ Ἀπίης γαίης· καλίσαντο γὰρ αὐτοί·
 Καὶ μαχόμεν κατ’ ἔμ’ αὐτὸν ἐγὼ. κείνοισι δ’ ἂν οὔτις
 Τῶν, οἳ νῦν βροτοὶ εἰσιν ἐπιχθόνιοι, μαχέοιτο.
 Καὶ μὲν μὲν βουλέων ξύνιεν, πείθοντό τε μῦθον·
 Ἀλλὰ πίθεσθε καὶ ὑμεῖς, ἐπεὶ πείθεσθαι ἄμεινον.

Those who take the French to be a translation of the Greek, must consider old Nestor a ridiculous babbler indeed. But, as he does not say a word of his “persuasive eloquence,” nor call Achilles and Agamemnon, after, at least, ten campaigns, “jeunes guerriers,” nor make tawdry epigrams about “jeunesse” and “vieillesse,” we must confer that compliment on his critic. The heroes of past days, says Nestor, admitted me to their councils, and were persuaded by my advice. “Be ye, too, persuaded by me; for it is best to yield to persuasion.” Πίθεσθε and πειθεσθαι should not be translated "obey." In the preceding line, he says the great men whose memory he holds in the highest honor, πείθοντο — μύθοι. He could not intend to convey the idea that they obeyed him, "As they thought me worth listening to, and as they adopted my suggestions, let me have the same power with you. It is best to listen to advice." It is needless to point out, that all the picturesque graces of the original are omitted wholly in the translation. The three or four hasty lines in which Voltaire concludes are not worth quoting. He has designedly caricatured, or unintentionally mistaken the character of the old horseman of Pylos. Perhaps there is a sprinkling of both—he might have both mistaken and misrepresented. Had it been Homer's task to have written a poem on the wars of the Ligne, he would not have written the Henriade. Is there a poem in the world in which so many fine situations, noble thoughts, and gallant characters, are lost? But that is no business of mine now. The Henriade decides as to the capability of its verse-maker to criticise the Iliad; and yet, to the end of his life, the witty, shrewd, ingenious author of Candide saw not the ridicule of his position. He could be smart, and gay, and biting, against Freron, for daring to review Voltaire. He thought it a highly proper dispensation of Providence that Voltaire was allowed to review Homer.

He concludes by saying, that the Greek chiefs must have been displeased by the self-praise of Nestor on his wisdom, and the disparagement to which they were subjected by his extolment of the great men of old. There is no self-praise of Nestor in Homer, and we may, therefore, let the part of the objection pass. But the other objection is mean. Voltaire had written the Siècle de Louis Quatorze. Would Turenne have felt any offence, if an officer, capable of expressing his sentiments, and giving a military or satisfactory reason for his opinions, had commenced by telling the marshal that he had, some thirty years before, served under Gustavus Adolphus, Bernhard of Sax Weimar, John Banner, and Leonard Tortensohn, men who were masters of war—καὶ ἀρείουσιν ἡεπὲρ ὑμῖν—men who had beaten Count Tilly, and Pappenheim, and the Friedlander? Would Marlborough think that his head stood less high because he acknowledged the genius of his old commander, Turenne? Or would Prince Eugene deem himself wronged by panegyrical references to his friend in campaign after campaign, the duke? I do not wish to go to examples nearer nor more distant. But if I must look closer at home—I am out of the way of knowing who are the young gentlemen who at present call themselves soldiers, but I am sure they would not be angry if they were directed to look carefully over the peninsula campaigns for instruction; and Nestor does no more. As for Ercilla, brought into this unfair contrast by Voltaire, it is sufficient to say that his poem is abundantly tedious, with a few good descriptive verses here and there. The speech of Coloco is not to be compared to the speech of Nestor—for this plain reason, abating the inferiority of genius, that Ercilla was of a different race from the speaker, and wrote as a stranger. Homer did not.

In the second book of the Iliad, Jupiter, wishing to delude Agamemnon to fight, sends him a pernicious dream in the appearance of Nestor. The god naturally chooses that the counsellor of precipitate action should appear as the phantom of the ever-ready old warrior. On the assembly of the council, when the dream is related, Nestor at once confirms the advice of his shadowy representative, by calling for an instant arming. A sort of panic follows, the checking of which is left to the spirit and sagacity of Ulysses; but the heart-rousing speech to the soldiery, summoning them to the field, regardless who may stay behind, threatening with death the coward who dares fly his banners, now that the war is once fairly joined—and recommending that every tribe should, in the approaching contest, be marshalled under its appropriate standard, so that all might be stimulated to the utmost exertion under the eye of their own leaders, and kindred [no longer subjected to the single will of one overmastering mind, Achilles]—that speech, and heart-stirring it is, is spoken by Nestor in words of fire.

In the third book we hear nothing of him; but the silence is eloquent. Soon after the armies have joined, a duel between Paris and Menelaus is proposed, and a truce for the interim is concluded, with a direct agreement that it is to lead to a permanent termination of the war. Here is a work of peace. If Homer intended Nestor to be merely a talkative old man, what fitter opportunity for the display of his “persuasive eloquence” could be found? Priam is brought forward; and, from the Scæan gate, his daughter-in-law, Helen, points out the most remarkable persons of the Grecian host. Who could be considered to be more remarkable than the sweet-tongued Nestor, the eloquent orator of the Pylians, who had outlived two generations of articulately speaking men, and was now ruling over the third? What could be more natural than that Priam should have desired to look upon his coeval king? But, no, Helen points out Agamemnon, Ajax, Ulysses, Idomeneus—and says that she recognises many another dark-eyed Greek, whom she could name. There is no notice of Nestor. The treaties are carried forward with all the pomp and solemnity of sacrifice; but old Nestor no where meets old Priam. Ulysses is chosen to attend the religious ceremonies, and to make preparations for the war-closing duel, as he had before been sent on a mission to prevent the contest altogether, by demanding the pacific restoration of Helen. So Antenor is carefully made to inform us in this very book. On such missions we never find Nestor engaged. He was no man of protocols.

In the fourth book, the truce is broken; and Nestor, invisible in time of peace, is then to be found at his post. Sulky we may conceive him to have been during the time when a chance existed for the war being concluded; but, now that it is again afoot, we find him "ready, ay, ready for the field." Idomeneus, who appears to be Homer's model of martinet duty, the Ajaxes, always prompt to war, and Nestor, are the first to be in position for fight. Agamemnon, traversing the line, meets the old man arranging his troops according to the most approved tactics of the day; and I venture to say, that Colonel Mitchell would not find much fault with his directions, though, perhaps they do not tally with the regulation-book.* Here, as usual, Ulysses is studiously placed in contrast. He does not stir until the general has ordered. Nestor is up at the first sound. When the melée fairly commences, we are called on to notice that the Pylion troops are first in action; for it is Antilochus, the favorite son of the old man, who kills the first Trojan slain in the long battle-roll of the Iliad. This is not chance, as some commentators have imagined; for the same idea prevails through the poem.†

In the fifth book, Diomed has it all to himself; but in the sixth we have the fierce voice of Nestor shouting for blood and spoil, and urging an onward charge. Shortly afterward, in the seventh, it is his to reprove the reluctance of the Grecian chiefs to meet Hector. What can be finer than his speech, in spite of the prosing criticism to which it has been subjected? In substance, it is no more than that he regrets he is no longer a match for the most vigorous warrior of the opposite army — that, in former times, he had fought and killed a far more tremendous antagonist; but, as his day had passed, some more competent warrior should meet the defiance. His appeal is answered. There could have been no real want of courage on the part of the Grecian chiefs, but no one was anxious to put himself forward before the others. The voice of Nestor relieved the difficulty, by calling up all. It has been always noticed, that of the nine who rise, the last is Ulysses. Perhaps it may be straining the contrast between the characters too much to say that concluding, from the issue of the duel in the morning, and the general character of the war, that the contest now proposed would turn out to be of no ultimate importance, he declined to meddle with it, until it was necessary for his character as a man of the sword to come forward. The antagonist of Ereuthalion, the mace-bearer, would, if he had been younger, have sprung to accept the challenge at the first word.

* Colonel Mitchell, about this time [1838] had written a Treatise on Tactics.—M.

† Ex. gr. When Menelaus, whose death might have put an end to the war, is in danger, it is Antilochus who comes to his assistance. When Patroclus falls, he guards his dead body, in desperate battle, until he is specially sent to inform Achilles. Thrasymedes is first to guard the trenches. We find him with his father's golden shield, in the most desperate crisis of the action. Nestor himself, as I have said above, is everywhere. This is not chance.—W. M.

Finding, however, that the Greeks have had the worst of the day, he recommends that they should entrench their fleet; but this piece of military prudence [it was the best advice under the circumstances] does not prevent him from being in the thickest of the fight the next morning, outside the stockades. The scale preponderates in favor of Troy, and all fly the field but Nestor alone. True it is that he does not stay there from choice, but because one of his horses has been wounded and he can not get off. But it is evident that he has been in the very heat of the battle, for his horse has been hit by Paris, the crack shot of the Trojans; and it is equally evident that he is quite cool under the dangerous circumstances of being left alone on the field against the on-sweep of a victorious army. He is disencumbering himself of his horse, by cutting the traces with well-practised hand, when Diomed comes to the rescue. Ulysses will not return to a hopeless charge: but Nestor, without scruple, accepts the office of charioteer to Diomed in his rush against Hector. What a post he has volunteered to occupy, we may judge from the fact that the similar post under Hector, against whom he is driving with furious pace, has consigned charioteer after charioteer to death. The flashing bolt of Jupiter comes between him and the enemy, and he retires, consoling Diomed with the reflection that they have done all that men could be called upon to do. Hector advances in triumph, and the first reward that he proposes for his exertions is the shield of the retreating Nestor, the glory of which has reached heaven.

In the ninth book, he is found at the council that recommends the mission to Achilles; but Ulysses is the ambassador. More active in the tenth, he is ready to rise at the first call, and perform his duty of advising; but again Ulysses is the person entrusted with the espionage. In the eleventh book he is in the bloodiest part of the fray, when Machaon is wounded, and he drives the Doctor out of the fight. What the merit of the medical practice may be, I do not know; but certain it is, that he sets down the son of Æsculapius to something like a bowl of punch. As "the wise physician" makes no objection, we must suppose the treatment was excellent. It is, I think, somewhat remarkable that Machaon should be silent. His skill is praised—his person is protected—his wound is taken care of—he is hospitably entertained; but the Doctor does not say one word in this most loquacious of poems. I believe he is the only person, of the slightest importance, who holds his tongue. Is this accidental?

Linked close with the story of the poem is this incident. Achilles sees that Nestor has left the field, and suspects that the person with whom he has left it is Machaon. He is sure that the old man would not have abandoned the fight without the necessity of bringing off some one of importance. Hence comes the speech which Scaliger says "obtundit," but which, considered in relation to the poem and the character, is admirably in place; and, considered by itself, is a ballad of magnificent beauty. It fitly forms the connection between the two parts of the Iliad, of which it is precisely the middle in point of place. Nestor has failed to reconcile the jarring chieftains, by his address, in their original quarrel; but he succeeds at second hand in inflaming the followers of Achilles by tales of dashing warfare, contrasting shamefully with the inglorious ease in which the once-famed Myrmidons were lying in consequence of the pique of their commander. His concluding appeal catches Patroclus, and the business is done. The Myrmidons from that moment are destined to fight, and Nestor and Machaon may quietly finish their Pramnian, until the sound of the approaching war calls the old man up. His fortifications have been broken through—the tide of war rushes to the ships—something like a saue qui peut is the order of the day—and he seizes his son's shield (his own being by that son borne in the brunt of battle) to exhort and bring forward the Greek chiefs, to aid their followers by example, if not by actual prowess. In the various vicissitudes of the fight we find him still ready—in its most desperate circumstance his prayer checks the last calamity—in the agony of flight he arrests the fugitives by passionate adjurations, and brings them back to the combat. When Achilles appears, we, of course, lose sight of Nestor: to Ulysses falls all the task of reconciliation, and no warrior must appear in the field after the avenger has come. The old soldier makes his final appearance in the Iliad, counselling his son how to win at a chariot race. Other duty he now had none.

Every where he is in the foremost of the fight; every where he counsels turbulent and prompt action; every where he is as ready as Dalgetty for eating and drinking. When danger presses he is not profuse of words. His speeches, urging rapid advance, instant action, close combination, desperate clinging together in desperate circumstances, are brief and energetic. Where time serves, and a set oration is to be made, he makes one referring, without impertinence, to his own experiences, as guide for the action of others. Every body likes him; his recollections of the friends of his youth, his feelings toward the sons of his age, are full of kindness. So introduced by the Iliad, we rejoice to find him in the Odyssey, safe returned from all perils—feasting away at the sea-side, girt by his sons and kindred—cheery and communicative, as in the war of Troy—kindly remembering old companions slain—wishing well to those who may survive, but by no means much troubling himself about the various casualties of life—and ready to afford hospitable reception to all who ask it, be they true men or thieves.

The Greeks more modern than Homer, but before the downfall of their independence under the Romans, had no relish for this character. Their taste became of the town, townly; and their Nestors were only wrangling old men in debating clubs. In the mightier state of Rome a Nestor could not appear at all. A gentleman between sixty and ninety must, if in any degree distinguished, have passed through the most eminent offices of the state, and retired to his place in the senate, or come forward in critical emergencies to lead great armies. The private soldier was discharged at five-and-forty; and, if he had well-played his cards, was something like a common-councilman in a thriving municipium. The fighting, feasting, spoiling, speechmaking, tumultuous old man, surrounded by his fighting sons, never occurred to their ordinary imagination. No doubt there were many such, of humbler degree, to be found in the armies of Macedon and Rome. In the army of Alexander he must have seen many a gray-haired soldier, who had followed his father when they first emerged from their Macedonian fastnesses, and was now serving on the banks of the Euphrates. Alexander's men belong to history. Regular war had caught too much hold of the Roman imagination to allow them to make irregular warfare a favorite topic of poetry. Such war was always against themselves. In the ages which intervened between the decay of Latin literature and the re-appearance of learning in Europe, we had Nestors in thousands. Need we go further than the progenitor of Queen Victoria, the Marquis Azo? But where was the bard? When letters returned, Homer was, of course, read or expounded only by the viri clarissimi atque doctissimi, who despised the knights and barons of their time [the compliment was liberally returned], and, immersed in grammars and lexicons, did not see the five hundred Iliads, with their full complement of Homeric heroes, going on before their eyes. To these critics, who, by the way, did not in general like Homer, old Nestor was a model of aged wisdom and aged feebleness. Dictys Cretensis or Dares Phrygius was as good authority as the Iliad, if not better.

When the reign of what was called taste came, it was easy to conjecture what would be the fate of "the old bore." I have already analyzed the criticism of Voltaire, and shall now look at Nestor, as given to us by Pope. From beginning to end it is a mistake. Pope planned him in his mind as a highly respectable gouty member of the House of Lords, rising with due deliberation to move an address or amendment. Pope's own "Coningsby harangues" would be a fit preface to the style of oratory and manners he has designed for Nestor. His first appearance in Pope is this:—

"To calm their passions with the words of age,
Slow from his seat uprose the Pylian sage,
Experienced Nestor; in persuasion skilled,
Words sweet as honey from his lips distilled.
Two generations now had passed away,
Wise by his rules, and happy by his sway;

Two ages o'er his native realm he reigned,
 And now the example of the third remained.
 All viewed with awe the venerable man,
 Who thus with mild benevolence began :
 'What shame, what wo,' &c.

All the words intruded here give a false idea. What wisdom the rules of Nestor, or what happiness his sway afforded the Pylians—his merits in being the example of the third age over which he reigned—the awe with which the venerable man was beheld, and the mild benevolence of his speech; for all this he is indebted to Pope. Homer merely tells us, that “among them sprang up the sweet-tongued Nestor, the eloquent [perhaps shrill-voiced] speaker of the Pylians, from whose lips dropped words sweeter than honey. Two generations of articulate-speaking men, with whom he had been born and reared in lovely Pylos, had passed away, and he was now ruling as a king over the third. He thus wisely harangued them and addressed.”

But the great blunder of the passage, because it is a blunder carried on throughout the whole character, is the translation of ἀνόρουσε—by “slow from his seat uprose the Pylian sage”—a blunder the more inexcusable, because even the more ordinary commentators—Camerarius, for example—had especially noted the impetus of the old chief. Up jumped, says Homer—Slow rose, says Pope. ὦ πόποι! (which is perhaps, “Good God!” but in all fair equivalence—more like our own national exclamation) says Homer. “The venerable man with mild benevolence began,” says Pope.

Pope is fond of addressing him by similar epithets. When he is first in the field to fight, we find him in the “reverend Nestor;” in the original, Δ. 293, it is plainly Νέστορ—“Nestor thus his reverend figure reared,” mere ἱππότα Νεστωρ, ι. 52. “Nestor, the sage protector of the Greeks”—ποιμένα λαῶν, κ. 73—a phrase applied to every prince. While charging Hector himself,

“The reverend charioteer directs his course,
And strains his aged arms to lash the horse.”

The reverend charioteer does no such thing :—

Νέστωρ δ' ἐν χεῖρεσσι λάβ' ἥνια σιγαλδέντα
Μάστιξεν δ' ἵππους, τάχα δ' Ἑκτορος ἄγχι γέγοντο.

There is no straining in the case: he whipped the horses, and they speedily came up to the best man of the opposing army. When the lightning of Jupiter drives them back, then, according to Pope,

“Nestor’s trembling hands confessed his fright.”

Homer does not say so :—

Νέστωρ δ' ἐκ χείρων φύγεν ἥνια σιγαλδέντα.

There is no fright or trembling about him. He gives advice to retreat, as the will of Heaven has declared against them; but consoles his companion with the hope of better fortune on another occasion, and ridicules him for apprehending disgrace or taunt for yielding on the present. As usual in Pope, Diomed addresses him with the clerical epithet :—

“O reverend prince, Tydides thus replies,
Thy years are awful, and thy words are wise;”

which is a rather liberal expansion of Παντὰ γερὸν, κατὰ μοῖραν ἔειπας.

He applies the title sometimes in a manner that is quite comic. When he is seated with Machaon over his cycceion,*

“The cordial beverage reverend Nestor shares;”

just as if he was Thomson’s parson—“some doctor of tremendous paunch.” It would be in vain to seek his reverence in Homer. To make amends, I suppose, for the extra sanctity of

* For the making of this mixture, see Coray on Theophrastus. It must have been strange drinking, if we perfectly understand what was the nature of its ingredients.—W. M.

character with which he has invested the old man, he makes him more cheery than the original when he is disturbed over his cups.

“But not the genial feast nor flowing bowl
 Could charm the cares of Nestor’s watchful soul.
 His startled ears the increasing cries attend.”

The Greek of all this is,—

Νέστορα δ’ οὐκ ἔλαθεν ἰαχῇ, πίνοντά παρ ἔμπησ. Ξ. 1.

Pope has thrown in the genial feast, which was nothing more than honey, flour, and garlick. He ought not, however, to have described him as being startled—for there is nothing to warrant the charge. Οὐκ ἔλαθεν ἰαχῇ signifies, by a common figure, Nestor attentively was listening to the battle all the time he was engaged in drinking. It never escaped his attention for a moment.

If we are reminded that he is reverend over the bottle, our attention is called to his age on a still stranger occasion.

“The draught prescribed fair Hecamede prepares,
 Arsinous’ daughter, graced with golden hairs,
 Whom to his aged arms, a royal slave,
 Greece, as the price of Nestor’s wisdom, gave.”

A somewhat strange reward for wisdom. But why on such an occasion remind us—I am sure Hecamede would not like to be so reminded—that Nestor’s arms were aged. Homer commits no such mistake: he says,

——— ἦν οἱ Ἀχαιοὶ
 ἔξελον——— Λ. 625.

“whom the Greeks chose for him,” because he excelled the other chiefs, not in abstract wisdom, but in βουλῇ—in council. The prizes were distributed according to the merits of the officers with regard to the war. The commander-in-chief claimed the lion’s share. Achilles obtained his, because, as he tells us, his hands had carried forward the most laborious duties of the field. A prize was therefore due to Nestor, whose head was engaged in forwarding the general advantage as much as the hands of the warrior.

Whether he took the lady to his arms, or not, does not appear from Homer. She only acts as his housekeeper; and we know that when Agamemnon calls up Nestor at midnight, he finds the old soldier lying alone, with no companions but his weapons of war. If, however, Pope throws this slur upon our septuagenarian's chastity, he elsewhere softens his practical recommendations to the soldiers in their dealings with the fair sex. The English Nestor urges them to proceed valorously with the war, until victory is won—

“And every soldier grasp a Phrygian wife.”

This might mean that the Greeks were to unite themselves in the most decorous wedlock with the ladies of Phrygia. The Greek Nestor, far more explicit, leaves no ambiguity—

Πρὶν τινα παρ Τρώων ἀλοχῶ κατακοιμήσθαι.

And this for the laudable purpose of most properly revenging the affront offered to Helen—and for no other reason whatever.

When he is taunting the Grecian chiefs with their lack of courage in meeting Hector, Pope thus introduces him:—

“He from whose lips divine persuasion flows,
Grave Nestor thus in graceful act arose.

The divine persuasion consists in his telling them that their laggard reluctance will spread sorrow and disgrace over all their country, and make Peleus in particular [father of the chief whose absence inspired Hector with the daring to challenge the rest of the Greeks, and, therefore, doubly grieved by the desertion of his son, and the dishonorable shrinking of his brother princes] pray for death. His gravity is displayed in an account of a fierce battle he had fought with a gigantic champion, wielding an army-crushing mace. That his act of rising was graceful we do not learn from Homer, and, from former circumstances, should rather conjecture it to be brusque. All that the Greek says is —

Νέστωρ δ' Ἀργείοισι ἀνίστατο καὶ μετέειπεν.

Pope borrowed the phrase, “in graceful act arose,” from Milton, who applies it to the rising of the wily Belial; but Nestor had much more of the spirit of Moloch—so far, at least, as proclaiming “his voice to be all for war.”

One couplet in the English poet well represents the original, and ought to have set Pope on the right scent —

“Old as I am, to age I scorn to yield,
And daily mingle in the martial field.”

Οὐδὲ τι φῆμι
Μιμνάζειν παρὰ νηόσι γέρων πῖρ ἐὼν πολεμίστης.

He feebly translates Nestor's fierce cry to the soldiers in the sixth book—

“Old Nestor saw, and roused the warriors' rage:
‘Thus heroes, thus, the vigorous combat wage;
No son of Mars descend for servile gains
To touch the booty while a foe remains.
Behold yon glittering host, your future spoil—
First gain the conquest, then reward the toil.’”

[Feeble, indeed, are the last lines, compared with the slaughter-breathing original—

Ἄλλ' ἀνδρας κτεινόμεν, ἔπειτα καὶ τα θεήλοι
Νέκρους ἀμπέδιον συλήσετε τεθνεώτας.

“On, boys! on! First let us kill them—then at your leisure, you may strip their dead bodies, stretched upon the field.” Kill, shouts Nestor—gain the conquest, quote Pope. Plunder the dead, is the plain phrase of Homer—reward the toil, insinuates the same command in his translator. The fine change of persons in κτεινόμεν and συλήσετε is quite lost in the English. "Let us—us altogether, princes and privates—fall on the enemy, and cut them down. That is the duty of all soldiers, no matter what may be their rank. Then you, my lads, may seize on the armor of the slain, according to the regular laws of war. With such an occupation I, Nestor, King of Pylos, can not have any thing to do. I shall join you in the charge, but my hands must not be engaged in the promiscuous pillage of the dead."]

Yet even in Pope's version of the passage, there is enough to mark the fire and energy of the man. Why, then, is he constantly, and without the slightest warrant from the original, called "reverend," "venerable," "grave," "slow," and so forth? Why should we have a general impression forced upon us, that he is nothing but a perpetual prater, ordinarily prosing, often not far from drivelling? He was, on the contrary, a fine, dashing, old fellow—trained from his youth to constant war, ready to recommend battle or foray, and as ready to join in it. Greece, when the art of criticism was let loose upon poetry, furnished no such character—there was no opportunity of his appearance amid the disciplined legionaries of Rome. In the days of their triumph, he was to be sought among Dacians and Thracians, Cimbri and Teutones, Germans and Gauls, and other irregular warriors. But to them Homer was unknown. When Rome fell, how could we expect that those who only understood his language, the wretched Byzantines, could understand his gallant characters? The crusaders, on the contrary, who had among themselves many an Achilles and Ajax, and many a Nestor and Ulysses, could have well understood the characters; but they had never heard of the poems in which they were depicted. The same is true of their bold Mahometan opponents. When the Iliad and Odyssey came popularly among the nations of western Europe, diplomacy and politics had begun to exert their antiromantic influence; and the Nestors confined themselves to church or cabinet, and wielded the pen, not the sword. Since scientific warfare has reduced the soldier first to an automaton and then to an atom,* and the plan of fighting à la distance has been the order of the day, chivalrous feelings may continue to actuate the military bosom, but the chivalrous characters of old are gone; and among them, most hopelessly, the character of Nestor. Yet even in our time, if Pope himself were to revive and write a poem on the last war, he would think it somewhat ridiculous to talk of the reverend Blucher, or to dwell upon the divine persuasion flowing from the lips of Wellington, as, rising in graceful act, he cried, "Up, guards, and at them!"

My critique is not dictated by the idle desire of disparaging so great a poet as Pope, who must ever shine among the most illustrious ornaments of our literature. His translation of Homer is crowded with beauties of language and versification, and would be considered in every respect a most magnificent poem, if we had not the original. The misfortune is, that Pope formed his ideas of character from a system of society wide as the poles asunder from that in which Homer lived, and to which he referred his heroes. If we were to seek through the world's annals, we could not find a circle so remarkably artificial as that in which Pope delighted to dwell. A quenching of sentiment and generous feeling was there made a matter of boast. Sneering was the littérateur philosophy: correctness, the littérateur taste. According to such codes were the heroes of Homer judged; and Pope is not to be blamed for endeavoring to render them as presentable at the court of Louis Quatorze as he could. It was his ill luck that his politics gave him a dislike

* "If the old system attempted to reduce the soldier to a mere automaton, the new one reduced him to a mere atom; for its only discoverable principle, the only principle from which it never deviated, was an utter disregard of human life and human suffering."—MITCHELL, Thoughts on Tactics, &c., p. 4.

to Marlborough, because there was many a captain, "when our army was in Flanders," whose criticism might have mended the fine gentlemanism of the bard of Twickenham. The well-known epigram tells us, that

"After-ages will with wonder seek Who first translated Homer into Greek."

Those after-ages, when they arrive, will be considerably astonished at finding that the Greek translator has contrived to give us men consistent throughout in their actions, in place of those who, in his English original, are perceived to be perpetually puzzling the reader between two classes of ideas; sometimes endeavoring to represent the manners of the earliest dawn of human society, sometimes working hard to soften, or, at least, to alter the impression, so as to suit its most refined, or, perhaps, rather its most rotten phase of existence.

A hundred years ago, goût—taste—was predominant; and we could not call a spade, a spade, in any of the high or honorable departments of literature. Those who, in such departments, figured off as most tasty, were, when they dabbled in its most infamous dark corners, plain and explicit enough. Homer, clear in his meanings, straight-forward in his characters, honorable in all his sentiments, essentially anti-licentious in his language and the conduct of his poem, had no chance among the critics of the school of esprit. His defenders were not much better, for they excused him on the ground of the want of politeness of the age in which it was his misfortune to exist. Since that time we have had another school. We have found, that what chivalry inspired might be what the grammarians and men of goût rejected. So we got back to Homer. The truly classical and the truly romantic are one. The moss-trooping Nestor reappears in the moss-trooping heroes of Percy's reliques, and those whom those reliques inspired.

"An aged knight, to danger steeled,
 With many a moss-trooper came on ;
 And azure, in a golden field,
 The stars and crescent graced his shield,
 Without the bend of Murdieston.
 Wide lay his lands round Oakwood tower,
 And wide round haunted Castle-Ower :
 High over Borthwick's mountain flood
 His wood-embosomed mansion stood ;
 In the dark glen, so deep below,
 The herds of plundered England low.
 His bold retainers' daily food,
 And bought with danger, blows and blood.
 Marauding chief ! his sole delight
 The moonlight raid, the morning fight :
 Not even the Flower of Yarrow's charms
 In youth might tame his rage for arms ;
 And still, in age, he spurned at rest,
 And still his brows the helmet pressed
 Albeit the blanchéd locks below
 Were white as Dinlay's spotless snow ;
 Five stately warriors drew the sword
 Before their father's band ;—
 A braver knight than Harden's lord
 Ne'er belted on a brand."

'This is from the Lay of the Last Minstrel. Fine as it is, the original description of Wat of Harden waving his helmet over his lyart hair, in the contemporaneous ballad, is still more graphic ; and, therefore, without going into minute particulars, more Nestorian and Homeric.

My preface is already too long for a short ballad. I hope I have succeeded in suggesting a view of the character of old Nestor, somewhat different from what is usually entertained. I can not conclude, however, without remarking, that a careful consideration of the tasks continuously assigned to Nestor and Ulysses throughout the Iliad will help to dispel the absurd idea that it could have been written by more hands than one.

The Return of the Chiefs from Troy.

FROM THE ODYSSEY.—Book III. 66-200.

[TELEMACHUS, accompanied by Minerva, in the appearance of Mentor, seeking intelligence of his father, arrives at Pylos. There they are hospitably entertained by Nestor, whom they find at a feast.]

The Return of the Chiefs from Troy.

I.

[THE tables were set where the salt-sea shore
Was washed by the flowing brine,]
And all the guests, when the feast was o'er, 66
Were filled with meat and wine.

II.

Then the Knight* of Gerene said, " 'Tis fit
That we should truly hear
Who are the guests that among us sit,
Since now they are full of cheer. 70

III.

" Strangers, who are ye? † whence and why
Sail ye along the sea?
Do you your course as merchants ply,
Or as roving wanderers free?

IV.

" As pirates who over the waters spread,
On desperate venture bounne,
Putting other men's lives in peril and dread,
All careless of their own?"

* I know that this is not the etymological translation of ἱππότης — but, under the circumstances of its being always applied to the perpetually horse-managing Nestor, I think I may take the word of chivalry.—W. M.

† Ὠξείνοισι, τίνες ἱστέ; πῶθεν πλεῖθ' ἐγὼ κέλευθα;

Now, gentle guests, the genial banquet o'er.—POPE.

V.

Then Telemachus answered the chieftain old, 75
With courage at his heart ;
For Athené herself a bearing bold
Did to the youth impart,

VI.

That he might ask for his absent sire,
And win for himself high fame :
“ King Nestor,” said he, “ as thou dost inquire,
Great pride of th’ Achaian name,
Our business and course, at thy desire,
I tell thee whence we came. 80

VII.

“ From Ithaca’s land we hither steer,
All under Neion’s head ;
No public care has brought us here,
But private feeling led.

VIII.

“ My father I seek, if his wide renown,
I may find as I take my way ;
Odysseus the bold, to thee well known,
Thy partner in war, till Ilion town
Before ye in ruin lay. 85

IX.

“ The fate of every chief beside
Who fought at Troy is known ;
It is the will of Jove to hide
His untold death alone.

X.

“And how he fell can no man tell ;
We know not was he slain
In fight on land by hostile hand,
Or plunged beneath the main. 90

XI.

“And here I pray, before thy knee,
To tell my sire’s sad fate ;
What thou hast seen, or else to thee
Did wayfarers’ tongues relate :
Because for sorrow marked was he,
Even from his birth-hour’s date. 95

XII.

“No pitying word, no tale to soothe,
From thee do I require ;
I only pray thee tell me truth,
If thou hast seen my sire.

XIII.

“I pray thee by his words well said,
His deeds right bravely done ;
By many a gallant promise made,
And broken never a one.

XIV.

“Be the woes and toils which he and thou, 100
And all the host went through
In Troy’s long war, remembered now,
And tell me the story true.”

XV.

Answered Gerene's knight : " Why call
My memory back again,
To griefs, there destined to befall
Achaia's tameless men ?

XVI.

" Whether their course o'er the dark blue sea 105
Our wandering vessels sped,
Scouring the coast for spoil and prey
Where'er Achilles led ;

XVII.

" Or fighting around King Priam's hold
Proud Ilion's turrets high ;
Brave Aias there in death lies cold,
There does Achilles lie ;

XVIII.

" There has Patroclus found his grave,
In council sager none ; 110
There lies the blameless and the brave,
Antilochus, my son.

XIX.

" My swift of foot, my bold of fight,
My dear, dear boy, lies low ;
But living wight can ne'er recite
Our endless tale of wo.

XX.

" Wert thou here to abide, for a twelvemonth's tide
Told five or six times o'er, 115

Question on question might still be tried
Of the ills the Achavi bore,

XXI.

“ Ere home thou wouldst sail, fatigued with the tale
Of our nine years’ constant toil
While we wrought for our foemen grief and bale,
With many a varied wile.

XXII.

“ Till the weary siege, by Jove’s high will,
Was brought to an end at last : 120
In warrior craft and wily skill
No chief thy sire surpassed.

XXIII.

“ If great Odysseus be thy sire —
And as on thee I gaze
Wondering, the likeness I admire
Thy speech to his betrays.

XXIV.

“ Thou must be his. How else suppose
That ever man so young,
Could speak in accents like to those
Of wise Odysseus’ tongue ? 125

XXV.

“ And he and I, in friendship bound,
Often in council state ;
Oft, ’mid the Greeks assembled round,
We mingled in debate :

XXVI.

“ We never differed, felt no jar,
Our counsels still were one,
Planning what should throughout the war
Be best for the Argives done.

XXVII.

“ But when o’erthrown was Priam’s town,
And we sought the ships again, 130
Then the Achaian host, into discord thrown,
Were scattered upon the main.

XXVIII.

“ Their home return had Jove designed
To fill with sorrow sad,
To punish the men of reckless mind,
And of feelings base and bad.

XXIX.

“ ‘Through high-born Pallas’ deadly ire
Many an ill death died; 135
For, ’twixt the Atridae of quarrel dire
She had the source supplied.

XXX.

“ ‘They assembled the host of the Argives all,
And a rash hour they set;
As the shades of night began to fall,
The unruly soldiers met.

XXXI.

“ For heavily laden they came with wine,
And by both chiefs were told,

In several speech, with what design
Did they that meeting hold. 140

XXXII.

“ And Sparta’s king wished across the seas
They should straight return again ;
But this counsel did not his brother please,
Who would the host detain,

XXXIII.

“ Till they had made the offering due
Of sacred hecatomb ;
By sacrifice hoping to subdue
Athené’s wrathful gloom. 145

XXXIV.

“ Fool ! that his vows were thrown away
Unthanked — he should have known ;
For the heart of the gods who live for aye
Is not to changing prone.

XXXV.

“ Fierce were the angry words they spoke,
These jarring brothers proud ;
And the Achivi up from the meeting broke
Rising in clamor loud. 150

XXXVI.

“ And as seemed best in each man’s sight,
Each different side he sought ;
And we lay down to rest that night
With bitter and hostile thought ;

For Jove had willed that foul despite
Should be to the Danai wrought.

XXXVII.

“ And we launched our ships when the morning came,
With our well-won treasure stored ;
And many a fair, deep-girdled dame
We took with us on board.

XXXVIII.

“ And half of the men desired to stay, 155
As Agamemnon bade ;
The other half we sailed away,
And a rapid voyage we made.
A god the vasty sea-deep spray
Smooth as a plain had laid.

XXXIX.

“ When we had come to 'Tenedos' isle,
We made our offerings there —
Hoping, now danger passed and toil,
We soon should homeward bear. 160

XL.

“ But Jove was sternly minded still
To lengthen out our woes ;
And by his will of strife the ill
Again among us rose.

XLI.

“ For some retraced again the seas,
Plying back the laboring oar,

Thinking their ancient chief to please
Whom they left on the Ilian shore ;
And, led by king Odysseus, these Sought the coast of Troy once more.

XLII.

“ But when I saw the evils dread
Some angry power had planned, 165
With the crowded galleys I there had led Beneath mine own command,
Away I fled—away with me fled
Bold Diomed and his band.

XLIII.

“ By Menelaus, at evening tide,
We were in Lesbos joined ;
While pondering how, through the waters wide,
We best our path might find.

XLIV.

“ Whether we should over Chios hold
Our course, and toward Psyria go, 170
Leaving Chios and all its headlands bold
Under our larboard bow ;

XLV.

“ Or under Chios, where Mimas' head
Is swept by many a gale.
To the gods for a guiding sign we prayed
To point our course to sail.

XLVI.

“ They gave the sign, and bade us steer
Right over the sea across,

Making Eubœa in full career,
So shunning wreck and loss.

175

XLVII.

“Shrill did the wind begin to blow,
As through the fishy deep,
Cleft by our vessel’s rapid prow
Onward our way we keep.

XLVIII.

“Geræstus’ haven by night we made,
And the thigh of many a bull
We there on Posidon’s altar laid,
Of grateful reverence full.

XLIX.

“Grateful that we a track so vast
Safe crossed of the ocean blue;
And ere the fourth day was gone and passed
Came Argos’ towers in view,
And Diomed’s men his ships at last
Into his harbor drew.

180

L.

“I held on to Pylos, mine own abode,
And never flagged the gale
From the hour that it was the will of the God
That it should fill my sail.

LI.

“So came I hither knowing naught,
Which of the Achaian host
Were back, my son, in safety brought,
And which of them were lost.

185

LII.

“But what, since I have dwelt at home,
Hath chanced to reach my ear,
Of all my old companions’ doom,
’Tis fit that thou shouldst hear.

LIII.

‘Well did the spear-famed Myrmidon
Homeward return, ’tis said,
Beneath Achilles’ glorious son,
Back to his country led.

LIV.

“Well, also, Pœas’ ancient seat
Did Philoctetes gain; 190
Well did Idomeneus, of Crete,
Bring back of his warrior train
Those who chanced not death in fight to meet;
None perished on the main.

LV.

“Though far off ye may dwell, ye have heard men tell,
How, by a hapless doom,
King Agamemnon murdered fell,
On his returning home;
But upon false Ægisthus well
Did fierce avenging come. 195

LVI.

“For a slaughtered man it is always good
A son to leave behind,
As he this traitor, in the blood

Of his noble father all imbued,
Has to cruel death consigned.

LVII.

“So thou, my son, whom I behold
A handsome youth, and strong,
Give, in thy bearing brave and bold,
Matter for future song.”

IV.

The Cloak.

FROM THE ODYSSEY.—Book XIV. 462-533.

THERE has been some difference of opinion as to the meaning of the epithet πολύτροπον, applied to Ulysses in the first line of the Odyssey; but I think, that those who consider his character as it is drawn in the poem, without referring to any other standard of morals than that proposed by Homer himself, can not doubt that it is intended to signify “abounding in tricks or wiles.” The Latin *versutus is by no means an

* Horace, it would appear, could not find a word for it; for he sinks it in his translation :—

“Dic mihi, musa, virum, captæ post tempora Trojæ,
Qui mores hominum multorum vidit et urbes.”

Which is as bald and inadequate a version as can be well conceived. Horace, properly enough, left out πολύτρόπος, when he confined the observation of Ulysses to merely seeing the customs and cities of the various nations through which he passed. Any man, or, as Savage Landor says, any dog could have done the same. Καὶ νόον ἔγνω gives a very different idea. In the eighth book, Alcinous distinctly asks him, not merely for a description of the regions in which his travels had lain, but for a critical account of their manners.

Ἄλλ' ἄγε μοι τόδε εἰπὲ, καὶ ἀτρεκέως κατὰλεξον,
Ὅππῃ ἀπεπλάγχθης τε, καὶ ἄστινας ἴκω χάρας
Ἀνθρώπων· αὐτοῖς τε πέλεις τ' εὖ ναιετάωσας·
Ἥ μὲν ὅσοι χαλεποί τε καὶ ἄγριοι, οὐδὲ δίκαιοι·
Οἳ τε φιλόξενοι, καὶ σφιν νόμις ἐστὶ θουόνης.

Thus rendered by Pope :—

“But say, through what waste region hast thou strayed?
What customs noted, and what coasts surveyed?”

equivalent, and I do not know any one English word which would give its full meaning. "Tricksy," or "scheming," conveys ideas of low deceit, which dishonors those who practise it. Homer, on the contrary, intended his epithet as a compliment. He intended it to describe a man of great mental sagacity and endless resources, determined to obtain his purpose by whatever means he could use, perfectly regardless whether it was or was not necessary to employ fraud and falsehood. In the Iliad, where Ulysses is a distinguished general in a large army, little necessity exists for the employment of such talents in any other manner than in the ordinary stratagems of war; but, even there, he kills Dolon most unscrupulously, after having obtained all his information, under an at least implied promise of quarter. In the Odyssey, where he is thrown altogether on his own resources, his polytropic powers are brought into full play; and a more mendacious hero never figured in a great poem. He is the Scapin of epic poetry. He can not achieve any thing without telling a lie; and, so far from this being considered a blemish, it is

Possessed by wild barbarians, fierce in arms,
Or men whose bosom tender pity warms?"

It is odd enough that he chooses to translate πολῖς—εἰ ναιεταώσας, well inhabited cities, by "waste regions." The second line is nearly a repetition of his translation of καὶ ῥέον ἔγωγε in the exordium:—

"Wandering from clime to clime, observant strayed
Their manners noted, and their states surveyed."

And this certainly gives the idea of observation, which Horace has omitted. In the last distich, barbarians, taken in its modern sense, represents the χαλῆπαι καὶ ἄγριοι of the original fairly enough; but there is nothing about their being "fierce in arms." Homer, as Thucydides has remarked, does not call foreign nations barbarians, as the Greeks of more modern times did. He calls the Carians (Il. B. 867), indeed, βαρβαρογύναι, and particularly notices the girlish appearance and unseasonable dandyism of their king,

"Who, tricked with gold, and glittering on his car, Rode like a woman to the field of war."—W. M.

accounted as an honor. On landing in Ithaca, the first person he meets is Minerva, in the appearance of a handsome young shepherd, "such as are the sons of kings;" and he immediately proceeds, after learning where he is, to give her a false account of himself.

Οὐδ' ὅγ' ἀληθέα εἶπε, πάλιν δ' ὅγε λάξετο μῦθον,
Αἰεὶ ἐνὶ στήθεσσι νόον πολυκερδέα νωμῶν.

"With unembarrassed readiness returned
Not truths, but figments to truth opposite;
For guile, in him, stood never at a pause."—COWPER.

Minerva listens with patience while he tells her that he had fled from Crete in consequence of having killed Orsilochus, one of the sons of Idomeneus, which he describes in all the exactness of "a lie with circumstances." She is infinitely delighted at this display of cleverness, instantly reveals herself, smiles graciously, pats him with her hand, and says:—

Κερδαλέος κ' εἷη καὶ ἐπίκλοπος, ὅς σε παρέλθοι
'Εν πάντεσσι δόλοισι, καὶ εἰ θεὸς ἀντιάσειε.
Σχέτλιε, ποικιλομῆτα, δόλων ἄτ', οὐκ ἄρ' ἔμελλες,
Οὐδ' ἐν σῇ περ ἑὼν γαίῃ, λήξειν ἀπατάων,
Μέθων τε κλοπίων, οἳ τοι πεδόθεν φίλοι εἰσίν

"Who passes thee in artifice well-framed,
And in imposture various, need shall find
Of all his policy, although a god.
Canst thou not cease, inventive as thou art
And subtle, from the wiles which thou hast loved
Since thou wast infant, and from tricks of speech
Delusive, even in thy native land?"—COWPER.

[Σχέτλιε, in this passage, is not infauste, as it is usually rendered, but indefatigabilis; as where Diomed addresses Nestor, when he is awaked by the old man going round the camp at midnight, Σχέτλιος ἐσσι γεραιε.* Cowper, in the above-

* I can not agree with Ernesti on this passage: "Σχέτλιος ἐσσι, nimum arduus es. Vim hujus vocis, non assecutæ sunt versiones. Glark. Quare autem arduus? σχέτλιος est arduus, exercitus, qui se nimis fatigat atque exerceat laboribus. Ern." A careful comparison of the passages in which the word occurs in Homer will show that it is qui fatigari nequit—one that quoted translation, seems to have omitted it altogether.] She adds that it is no use for him to waste his abilities on the present occasion, as she is as “wide awake” as himself. The following lines of flowing hexameter might be compressed into the less dignified phraseology of “I’m Yorkshire too.”

‘Αλλ’ ἄγε μηκέτι ταῦτα λεγώμεθα, εἰδότεε ἄμφω
 Κέρδε· ἐπεὶ σὺ μὲν ἐσσι βροτῶν ὄχ’ ἄριστος ἀπάντων
 Βουλῇ καὶ μῦθοισιν· ἐγὼ δ’ ἐν πᾶσι θεοῖσι
 Μῆτι τε κλέομαι καὶ κέρδεσιν· οὐδὲ σὺ γ’ ἔλνως
 Παλλάδ’ Ἀθηναίην, κόρυην Διὸς, ἥτε τοι αἰεὶ
 Ἐν πάντεσσι πόνοισι παρίσταμαι, ἥδ’ ἐφυλάσσω;

“But, come, dismiss me these ingenious shifts
 From our discourse, in which we both excel;
 For thou of all men in expedients most Abound’st and eloquence, and I throughout
 All heav’n have praise for wisdom and for art.
 And know’st thou not thine Athenæan aid,
 Pallas, Jove’s daughter, who in all thy toils
 Assist thee and defend?”—COWPER.

The favorite hero and the favorite goddess are here set up as models of deceit. It is quite characteristic to find Ulysses hard to be convinced that she is not humbugging (for that is the only word to express it), when she tells him that he is in Ithaca, and Minerva by no means offended at such a suspicion. As he commenced with a lying story to the goddess, so he proceeds improvising romances to every one he meets, varying the circumstances according to the persons he addresses. He always describes* himself as a Cretan, Crete being the can not be wearied out. In Johnson’s lines on Charles XII. we have an unconscious paraphrase of the word:—

“A frame of adamant, a soul of fire —
 No dangers fright him, and no labors tire.”—W. M.

* As here to Minerva, N. 256 — to Eumæus, in Ξ. 199:—

Ἐκ μὲν Κρητῶν γένος εὐχόμεαι εὐρεῖάν,
 Ἀνέρος ἀφνειοῦτο πάϊς.

“Know, then, I came
 From sacred Crete, and from a sire of fame.”

(which Eumæus repeats to Telemachus, II. 63)—and in T. 172, to Penelope.—W. M.

land of liars. "One of themselves," says St. Paul to Titus, i. 12, "even a prophet (a poet) of their own, said, The Cretians are always liars, evil beasts, slow bellies." Κρήτες δὲ ψεύονται, κ. τ. λ. In the passage of which I subjoin a translation, Ulysses merely wants a cloak to cover himself in a wet night, and even for that purpose he has recourse to a lie.
By the prompt compliance of Eumæus with his request, it is evident that the swineherd would have given the cloak for the mere asking; but it never would do, unless obtained by a stratagem of some sort. Lady Mary Wortley Montague
(I believe) used to say of Pope [a great Homeric translator], that if he wanted a fire-screen, he would use diplomacy to get it; and here Ulysses [a great Homeric hero] sets at work for the obtaining of a cloak the same resources as he had employed to win the "topless towers of Ilion." The minute touches thrown into his story—the precise description of the marshes where they lay, under the city wall, in a thick brake
—the north wind—the exact hour when he felt the cold, &c., give the circumstantial lie a strong air of vraisemblance worthy of Defoe himself. The lapse of seven or eight and twenty centuries has not altered this feature in the Greek character; their favorite chiefs are still πολύτροποι. Their leading heroes are Klephts: Hellenice, κλεπταὶ—thieves. The leading hero of the Odyssey is ἐπίκλοπος, thievishly disposed.
Well might M. Rogue exclaim that the modern Athenians
"are the same canaille that existed in the days of Themistocles."* Our English, or slang use of the word Greek, in the sense of cheat or blackleg, is remotely derived from the stratagems of Ulysses.

As this incident of the cloak is a story of soldier trickery, I have ventured to attempt it in a jocular ballad measure, which will be familiar to the readers of our old poetry, being, with a slight difference, that in which the adventures of Duke Philip of Burgundy and the drunken cobbler (the original of Sir Christopher Sly in the induction to the Taming of the Shrew) is told in Percy's Reliques, and other collections :

"Now, as fame doth report, a young duke keeps his court, and tickles his fancy with frolicsome sport," &c.*

* It is a difficult question to say what is the best metre in which the Greek hexameter should be rendered into English. In Bentley's own slashing style, he tells us : "Nam ut Latini omnia metrorum genera de Græcis acceperunt; ita nostrates sua de Latinis. Quo magis est dolendum, atque indignandum jam a literis renatis pueros ingenuos ad dactylica, quod genus patria lingua non recipit, ediscenda, ferulâ scuticâque cogi," &c. He then proceeds to show that the comic metres can be all adequately represented in English—that they are, in fact, the metres "quæ domi et in traviis inscientes ipsi [pueri] cantitant." Among them that "quod in epicis et heroicis jam diu apud nostrates regnum obtinet, ab iambico veterum senario profluxit; necessitate linguæ nostræ, quæ tota monosyllabis scatens cæsuram senarii raro admittet quinarinus factus :

"Though dee'p, yet clea'r | though ge'n'tle, yet not du'll."

Without entering into the general question of the derivation of our metres, it is tolerably clear, as Bentley says, that the dactylic hexameter is not suitable to our language, and that what we have chosen as our heroic metre is not a representative of the heroic metre of Greece and Rome, but a truncated trimeter iambic. The anapæstis is, therefore, not a more alien measure than that of Pope or Sotheby. And, in fact, it comes somewhat closer, if we scan with the older grammarians, by isolating as it were the first syllable, and then proceeding by anapæsts to the end—as,

Qua'd — rupeda'n — te putre'm — sonitu' — quatit u'n — gula ca'mp — um.

Removing the first and last syllables, and taking away an anapæst, we find our ordinary anapæstic metre —

—rupeda'n — te putre'm — sonitu' — quatit u'n —

is the same as,

And the cla'ns — at Cullo' — den are sca't — tered in fi'ght.

The hexameter has, therefore, somewhat the same analogy to our anapæstic metre as Bentley has pointed out to exist between our heroic and the Senarian iambic. But it is of no consequence. I do not think my anapæsts were liked, and therefore give them up. "If it was na weel bobb't, we'll bob it again." I hope my present attempt will find more favor.—W. M.

The Cloak.

I.

NOW, Eumæus, give ear and my other friends near; a tale
somewhat vaunting I pray you to hear:
For you know heady wine will the sagest incline, like a fool out of season, in singing to join;
Or unwisely to laugh, or to skip in a dance, and to say what were best left unspoken perchance.* 465

* I have translated this according to the comment of Athenæus, who is especially angry at the idea that Homer intended to abuse good liquor. He never, says the Deipnosophist, could have been so ill-natured, and so ill-bred, as to censure people for singing, or laughing, or dancing. It must be allowed that, if he was an enemy to wine-bibbing, he has been much maligned in the world:

“Laudibus arguitur vini vinosus Homerus.”

If Athenæus maintains that he knew the difference between ποσότης and ποιότης too well, to fall into the error of condemning a thing absolutely which should be only condemned secundum quid, I can not fitly render his grave logic, here so worthily employed; but I think his distinction is somewhat of the same kind as that made by the Baron of Bradwardine between ebrius and ebriosus. To sing — ᾄσαι — is no harm, or to dance either, or to laugh — Athenæus swears to it, νῆ Δ'; but μάλ' αἰίσαι, to sing too much, to sing out of season, to trouble the company — this, indeed, is bad behavior; and wine in such cases may be properly called ἡλεός, fool-making — otherwise not. Laughing also is very proper; but to laugh ἀπαλδον molliter — softly, affectedly — that is ἄνανδρον, unmanly, and not becoming a wise man. So of dancing. I am not sure that μάλ' will bear the interpretation here imposed upon it. But the guess is as good as any thing in Buttmann's Lexilogus — a book which I intend, in the course of this series, carefully to examine; and I have endeavored to represent it in my version.—W. M.

II.

But now 'tis too late, since to talk is my fate, for my tongue to keep back what it means to relate.
Oh! were I as young, and as fresh, and as strong, as when, under Troy, brother soldiers among,
In ambush as captains were chosen to lie,
Odysseus, and King Menelaus, and I. 470

III.

They called me as third, and I came at the word, and reached the high walls that the citadel gird,
Where under the town, we in armor lay down by a brake in the marshes with weeds overgrown;
The night came on sharp, bleak the north wind did blow, 475
And frostily cold fell a thick shower of snow.

IV.

Soon with icicles hoar every shield was frozen o'er; but they who their cloaks and their body-clothes wore
The night lightly passed, secure from the blast, asleep with their shields o'er their broad shoulders cast;
But I, like a fool, had my cloak left behind, 480
Not expecting to shake in so piercing a wind.

V.

My buckler and zone, nothing more had I on; but when the third part of the night-watch was gone,
And the stars left the sky, with my elbow then I touched Odysseus, and spoke to him lying close by— 485
“Noble son of Laertes, Odysseus the wise,
I fear that alive I shall never arise.

VI.

“In this night so severe but one doublet I wear, deceived by a god; and my cloak is not here;
And no way I see from destruction to flee.” But soon to relieve me a project had he. 490
In combat or council still prompt was his head,
And into my ear thus low-whispering he said :

VII.

“Let none of the band this your need understand : keep silent.”
Then, resting his head on his hand,
“Friends and comrades of mine !” he exclaimed, “as a sign,
while I slept has come o’er me a dream all divine :
It has warned me how far from the vessels we lie, 495
And that some one should go for fresh force to apply.

VIII.

“And his footsteps should lead, disclosing our need, to King
Agamemnon, our chieftain, with speed.”
Thoas rose as he spoke, flung off his red cloak, and, running, his way with the message he took ;
While, wrapt in his garment, I pleasantly lay 500
Till the rise of the golden-throned queen of the day.

IX.

If I now were as young, and as fresh, and as strong, perhaps here in the stables you swineherds among Some a mantle would lend, as the act of a friend, or from the respect that on worth should attend :
But small is the honor, I find, that is paid 505
To one who, like me, is so meanly arrayed.

X.

Then, keeper of swine, this answer was thine: "The manner,
old man, of thy story is fine,
For there was not a word out of place or absurd: thy request shall be granted as soon as preferred.
Not a cloak, or aught else, shalt thou want at my hand, 510
That is fit for a beggar in need to demand;

XI.

"Till the night shall pass o'er—in the morning once more, thy rags must thou don, for we here have no store.
Among cloaks to go range, or of doublets for change—had we more than one garment a-piece 'twould be strange.
But when the dear son of Odysseus comes back, 515
Of cloak or of doublet thou never wilt lack.

XII.

"Those will he bestow, and send thee to go, wherever thy thoughts and thy wishes may flow."
He rose as he said, and laid out a bed—and sheepskins and goats' upon it he spread;
And next, stretched by the fireside, Odysseus on these, 520
Lay in cloak large and thick, as he might at his ease.

XIII

To cover his form, at approach of a storm: or to wrap him in sleep as he there lay down warm—
The young men close by in the couch came to lie, but Eumæus refusing to stay from the sty,
Was girt to sleep out; while Odysseus was glad
That his herd in his absence such vigilance had.

XIV.

His sharp sword around his strong shoulders he wound, and then his thick cloak, wind-defying, he bound ;
Next, he put on his coat made of skin of she-goat—of a she-goat well fed, and of size worthy note.
And he took a sharp spear, with which he might weir the attack or of men or of dogs coming near ;
And to lie with the white-toothed porkers went forth,
In a cave of the rock, safely screened from the north.

V.

The Dog Argus.

FROM THE ODYSSEY.—BOOK XVII. 290–327.

“The poet” (ὁ ποιητῆς, the only time he is so called in the arguments of the books) we are told by the ὑπόθεσις, “relates how the dog” (ὁ κύων—it was needless to say what dog) “recognises his master.”

The Dog Argus.

I.

THEN as they spake, upraised his head, 290
Pricked up his listening ear,
The dog, whom erst Odysseus bred,
Old Argus lying near.

II.

He bred him, but his fostering skill
To himself had naught availed ;
For Argus joined not the chase, until
The king had to Ilion sailed.

III.

To hunt the wild-goat, hart, and hare,
Him once young huntsmen sped ;
But now he lay an outcast there, 295
Absent his lord, to none a care,
Upon a dunghill bed,

IV.

Where store of dung, profusely flung
By mules and oxen, lay ;
Before the gates it was spread along
For the hinds to bear away,

V.

As rich manure for the lands they tilled
Of their prince beyond the sea ;
There was Argus stretched, his flesh all filled
With the dog-worrying flea.

VI.

But when by the hound his king was known,
 Wagged was the fawning tail,
 Backward his close-clapped ears were thrown,
 And up to his master's side had he flown;
 But his limbs he felt to fail.

VII.

Odysseus saw, and turned aside
 To wipe away the tear;*

* Eustathius remarks, that it may appear strange that Ulysses sheds a tear over a dog, while he does not weep when he sees his wife drowned in sorrow. The archbishop maintains, that it is to be attributed to the fact that Ulysses was surprised by Argus, and had been prepared for Penelope. Perhaps so: but there are and sorrow for a dog is not of the cast of sorrow for a woman. The “much-enduring man” had been caught by the sight of old Argus, “and tears unbidden shed.” How could he have been affected by any physical demonstration of grief at the sight of a lady, whom, for so many long years, he had pined to behold, for a return to whom he had expended all the wiles of the wildest of minds?

“Thoughts which lie too deep for tears;”

In that fine poem, Roderick, the Last of the Goths, which is fuller of recognitions even than the Odyssey, Southey introduces a dog:

“While thus Florinda spake, the dog who lay
 Before Rusilla's feet, cying him long
 And wistfully, had recognised at length,
 Changed as he was and in those sordid weeds,
 His royal master. And he rose and licked
 His withered hand, and earnestly looked up
 With eyes whose human meaning did not need
 The aid of speech; and moaned, as if at once
 To court and chide the long withheld caress.
 A feeling, uncommixed with sense of guilt
 Or shame, yet painfulest, thrilled through the king;
 But he, to self-control now long inured,
 Represt his rising heart, nor other tears,

From Eumæus he chose his grief to hide, 305
 And "Strange, passing strange, is the sight," he cried,
 "Of such a dog laid here !

Full as his struggling bosom was, let fall
 Than seemed to follow on Florinda's words.
 Looking toward her then, yet so that still
 He shunned the meeting of her eye, he said,
 'Virtuous and pious as thou art, and ripe
 For Heaven, O Lady ! I will think the man
 Hath not by his good angel been cast off
 For whom thy supplications rise. The Power
 Whose justice doth, in its unerring course,
 Visit the children for the sire's offence,
 Shall He not in his boundless mercy hear
 The daughter's prayer, and for her sake restore
 The guilty parent ? My soul shall with thine
 In earnest and continual duty join . . .
 How deeply, how devoutly, He will know
 To whom the cry is raised !'

Thus having said,
 Deliberately, in self-possession still,
 Himself from that most painful interview
 Dispeeding, he withdrew. The watchful dog
 Followed his footsteps close. But he retired
 Into the thickest grove ; there yielding way
 To his o'erburthened nature, from all eyes
 Apart, he cast himself upon the ground,
 And threw his arms around the dog, and cried,
 While tears streamed down, 'Thou, Theron, then, hast known
 Thy poor lost master, . . . Theron, none but thou !'

Here we find how dangerous it is for even acknowledged genius to travel in the footsteps of genius of the first order. The hound Theron, and the man Roderick, are far inferior to the hound Argus, and the man Ulysses. Argus required no length of time to know his master. Instinct is instantaneous. If Theron had taken a moment's time to reflect, there was an end of the business. Ulysses repressed not his emotion—he concealed it from his companion, but it came. Roderick was stoic enough to appear unmoved in the presence of dog and woman ; but the moment that he is out of sight, he is selfish enough to indulge in reflections on his not being known by the ladies, as if it were a crime, an injury, or a shame. Ulysses goes forward without remark. He has proved himself to be full of human feeling, and he shows himself full of human wisdom, divested of splenetic sentiment or maudlin display of sorrow.

VIII.

“ Noble his shape, but I can not tell
 If his worth with that shape may suit ;
 If a hound he be in the chase to excel,
 For fleetness of his foot :

We recommend Southey to read Professor Wilson’s commentary on Argus. It is full both of poetry and philosophy :

“ The memory or fancy of a dog (or a horse) is a mystery not to be explained ; and all that genius can do is to give, as in this case, illustration of it, the truth of which has been come at partly by observation and partly by reflection, but chiefly by an intuition of an analogy almost amounting to identity between the sentient being in certain creatures we choose to call brutes, and certain creatures we choose to call men. And how know we that they have not a moral sense as well as ourselves — such a moral sense as is suitable to their condition, and to promote the chief end of Dog ? which, reverently be it spoken, seems to be to love man and keep his commandments. Philosophers deny reminiscence to dogs, and treat of it exclusively as a human endowment — an active power belonging but to those who have discourse of reason. The Ettrick Shepherd knew better.” — Blackwood’s Magazine for February, 1838. [Article “ Loss of Our Golden Key.”]

I regret I can not find room for the truly eloquent passage that follows ; but, as a contrast with Theron, I must give the comment on the recognition by Argus :

“ For years and years rejoicing in his vigor and his victories, for he crunched his way through wood and over mountain, and with crimson flews outhowled the wolf prostrate beneath his paws, seldom then did he remember his master ; for in the fullness of self-glorification dogs and men are alike forgetful of the past and regardless of the future, wallowing in the snow or sunshine (mercy on us ! we had almost said the blood and mire) of the present, and possessed wholly by the Now of life. But, oh, the difference to him on that dunghill ! Think ye his soul was absorbed in worrying fleas ? or that, during short respite from that mean misery, he did not often see the shadow of Ulysses ! He sees the substance at last ; and, sagacious far beyond Eumæus and Euryclea, and even Penelope, knows it is no beggar, ‘ but the Prince of all the Land.’ Sagacious ! yes — he smelt him to be the man of men. Dim as were his eyes, he sighted him ; deaf as were his ears, he overheard him speaking of him, his very self, the poor, old, worn-out, starved, beaten, flea-worried Argus. Not now could he leap, dance, bound, as of yore, or his paws would have been on those shoulders, and his tongue had licked that face, and his growls of ecstasy would have startled the suitors in the hall, as if a lion had been at the gate. And at the gate there was a lion.” — Blackwood, ibid.

And the lion did not weep, because he was not discovered by those from whom he desired to be concealed. — W. M.

IX.

“Or worthless as a household hound,
 Whom men by their boards will place,
 For no merit of strength or speed renowned,
 But admired for shapely grace.”* 310

X.

“He is the dog of one now dead,
 In a far land away ;
 But if you had seen,” the swineherd said,
 “This dog in his better day,
 When Odysseus hence his warriors led
 To join in the Trojan fray,

XI.

“His strength, his plight, his speed so light,
 You had with wonder viewed ; 315
 No beast that once had crossed his sight,†
 In the depths of the darkest wood,
 ‘Scaped him, as, tracking sure and right,
 He on its trace pursued.

* Pope thus translates these lines :

“Some care his age deserves : or was he prized
 For worthless beauty ? Therefore now despised.
*Such dogs and men there are, mere things of state,
 And always cherished by their friends, the great.”*

This is writing not epic, but epigram. Homer the aristocrat, Homer the gentleman, would not have indulged on sarcasms against the great, because they are great. Such strokes of satire are very well in the Beggar's Opera, but not in the Iliad or Odyssey. A translator of Homer should do what is written down for him, to the best of his power, but no more.—M.

† Κενώδαλον, ὅτι ἰδοίτο· καὶ ἔχνεσι γὰρ περιήδη.

I follow the ordinary reading, ἰδοίτο : δίδοιτο is, perhaps, better. If so, my third line should read,

XII.

“ But now all o’er in sorrows sore
 He pines in piteous wise ;
 The king upon some distant shore
 In death has closed his eyes ;
 And the careless women here no more
 Tend Argus as he lies.

XIII.

“ For slaves who find their former lord
 No longer holds the sway,
 No fitting service will afford,
 O just obedience pay.

320

XIV.

“ Far-seeing Jove’s resistless power
 Takes half away the soul
 From him, who of one servile hour*
 Has felt the dire control.”

“ No beast whom e’er he chased in flight.”

I leave it to Nimrod [Apperley] to decide if Eustathius is right, when he says that attributing to Argus powers of seeing takes away from his ichneutic merits. The commentators seem to think so. Non nostrum.—W. M.

* Ἡμισὺ γάρ τ’ ἀρετῆς ἀποαίρεται εἰς ὅπου Ζεὺς.

I translate not after ἀρετῆς, but νόον, a reading quoted by many ancient authors, in the place of ἀρετῆς, which I think is a gloss. Νόον seems to me more energetic. There is something to my mind extremely fine in Chapman’s version, though it certainly is not Homeric :

“ That man’s half virtue Jove takes quite away,
 That once is sunburn’d with the servile day.”—W. M.

XV.

This said, the swineherd passed the gate,
 And entered the dwelling tall,
 Where proud in state the suitors sate
 Within the palace hall. 325

XVI.

And darksome death checked Argus' breath
 When he saw his master dear;
 For he died his master's eye beneath,
 Coming back in the twentieth year. 327

* * I had translated this before Mr. Chapman's version appeared in Blackwood's Magazine.* I am gratified to see that one who, as a poet and a scholar, is so adequate to form a judgment, and to afford, by his own compositions, so excellent an example of its justice, agrees with me in selecting the Spenserian stanza, and in adopting the Greek names, Odysseus, &c., in place of the Latin. Let me ask him, however, if

"Now his bed
 The dungheap was; and piteous was his case,
 His master far away, old, outcast, in disgrace.
 There full of tick, on that unsightly heap,
 He saw and knew his lord," properly renders the original, l. 296-300 (in my version, st. iii. iv. v.)? The place of Ulysses was a farmhouse, surrounded by a farm-yard; and, though Mr. Chapman calls a dunghill an unsightly heap, we may be certain that the copious stock of manure destined for the fertiliza-

* In Blackwood for February, 1838, appeared several translations of the ballad of The Dog Argus. These were by Charles Lamb, Old Chapman, Cowper, Young Chapman—this last endorsed by Christopher North with "Done for us, and done well." This version by M. J. Chapman was in the Spenserian stanza, and fully merits the eulogy bestowed on it by John Wilson and William Maginn.—M.

tion of the large field did not appear so to the farmer. Solomon tells us [Prov. xiv. 4], "Where no oxen are the crib is clean, but much increase is by the strength of the ox." And the wisest of men would not have been shocked at what the oxen left behind them. Rose, when translating Casti, very properly determined

"To let go my author's skirt
When it would lead me into filth and dirt."

But it is from dirt moral we should recoil. There, surely, is nothing to corrupt the imagination or pollute the heart in a picture of a farm-yard, even though the dunghill be introduced. In fact, there is a poetic grace in leading the mind away from the misery of poor Argus, to the contemplation of the τέμενος μέγα of his master—his mules, his oxen, and his hinds. It is not in Homer we are to look for filth and dirt: we may find them, if we seek, lurking in the perfumed pages of a sentimental novelist, or warbled forth in the strains of a fashionable song-maker, in these days of refinement, when, as Mrs. Slipslop says, people's ears are the nicest parts about them. Mr. Chapman can afford to do without the squeamishness. He need not be afraid of following his great original.—W. M.

VI.

The Funeral of Achilles.

FROM THE ODYSSEY.—Book XXIV. 11-97.

AFTER the death of the suitors, Mercury conducts their souls to Hades, where they meet the shades of the departed heroes of the Trojan war. Achilles laments to Agamemnon the cruel fate which took off so renowned a chieftain as the King of Men; and Agamemnon, in reply, contrasts his own treacherous and unhonored death with the gallant fall of Achilles in the field, surrounded by companions in arms fighting over his body for a whole day, amid a whirlwind of dust, in a combat closed only by the interposition of Jupiter; and followed by unexampled funeral honors paid to his remains.

The Funeral of Achilles.

I.

THE ghosts by Leucas' rock had gone, 11
Over the ocean streams ;
And they had passed on through the gates of the Sun,
And the slumberous land of Dreams.

II.

And onward thence to the verdant mead,
Flowering with asphodel,
Their course was led, where the tribes of dead,
The shadows of mankind, dwell.

III.

Achilles and Patroclus there 15
They found with Nestor's son,
And Aias, with whom could as match compare
Of the host of the Danai none,
For manly form, and gallant air,
Save the faultless Peleion.

IV.

Around Achilles pressed the throng
Of ghosts in the world below ;
Soon passed Atrides' shade along,
And full was that shade of wo. 20

V.

About the king came crowding all
Who, by a murderous stroke,
With him were slain in Ægisthus' hall :
And first Achilles spoke.

VI.

" 'Twas once, Atrides, our belief,
That thunder-joying Jove
Ne'er honored other hero-chief
With equal share of love.

25

VII.

"Thy rule a mighty host obeyed,
And valiant was the array,
When outside Troy was our leaguer laid,
For many a woful day.

VIII.

"Yet did the gloom of dismal doom
First on thy head alight ;
From the fate that a birth is marked to come
Scaped never living wight.

IX.

"Would that in honor on the ground,
Where high thou hadst held command,
Thy fallen body had been found,
Slain upon Trojan land.

30

X.

"Where all the men of Achaian blood
Their chieftain's tomb might raise —

A tomb, in after-times to have stood,
For thy son proud mark of praise :
But 'twas fate that, by piteous death subdued,
Thou shouldst end thy glorious days."

XI.

"How blest," then said Atrides' shade,
"Thy lot, who fell in war,
Godlike Achilles, lowly laid,
In Troy, from Argos far." 35

XII.

"We round thy corse, as slain it lay,
The bravest and the best
Of either host, the livelong day
In slaughterous combat pressed.

XIII.

"Mid clouds of dust, that o'er the dead,
In whirlwind fierce arose,
On the battle field, all vastly spread,
Did thy vast limbs repose ;
The skill forgot, which whilome sped
Thy steed amid the foes.*

* Alas ! I know well how wretched is my imitation of the original. All I can say is, that others do not appear to me to have succeeded much better. The passage occurs also in the 16th Iliad ; and it is curious to find that Pope has translated it (or, perhaps, in the Odyssey, suffered it to be translated) variously. In the Iliad, his version is —

"But where the rising whirlwind clouds the plains,
Sunk in soft dust the mighty chief remains,
And, stretched in death, forgets the guiding reins."

In the Odyssey —

XIV.

"All day we fought, and no one thought
Of holding of the hand;
Till a storm to an end the contest brought,
Sent by high Jove's command.

XV.

"From the field of fight thy corse we bore,
And for the ships we made;
We washed away the stains of gore,
And thy body fair anointed o'er,
Upon its last bed 'laid.

"In clouds of smoke, raised by the noble fray,
Great and terrific even in death you lay,
And deluges of blood flowed round you every way."

I prefer the latter, inaccurate as it is—for I can not reconcile myself to thinking of Achilles, μέγος μεγαλωστί, as being merely "sunk in soft dust." "Great and terrific even in death you lay" is far more like. I have looked through the versions in other European languages, but can only say that the most amusing is the Dutch—

"Men vondt u uitgestrekt, ver van u legerwagen, Soo fier noch, dat met schrik de Troijers u ontsagen."

Ver van u legerwagen—"far from your baggage wagon," or if we should even ennoble it into "thy war chariot"—is a wrong translation; but, even if it were perfectly correct, what a different sound from the melancholy harmony of λελασμένος ιπποσυνάων! It is only fair, however, to say that the Dutch Odyssey is a very remarkable book, and deserves something far better than a joking notice. At all events, we all may comfort ourselves by the reflection, that even Virgil could not come nearer to his original than

"Ingentem, atque ingenti vulnere victus."—Æn. X. 842.—W. M.

[A better version than any here given is to be found in a couplet quoted by Gilbert Wakefield from Ogilby's forgotten translation,

When in a dusty whirlwind thou didst lie,
Thy valor lost, forgot thy chivalry, which has a 'melancholy harmony' of its own, akin to that of λελασμένος ιπποσυνάων, though it does not express μέγος μεγαλωστί.—ED.]

XVI.

“ Hot tears did the eyes of the Danai rain, 45
And they cut their flowing hair ;
Uprose thy mother from the main,
With all the immortal sea-nymph train,
At the tidings of despair.

XVII.

“ Loud over the sea rose the voice of wail,
And the host was filled with dread ;
And homeward they would, with hasty sail,
In their hollow ships have fled, 50

XVIII.

“ Had not a man, to whom was known
The wisdom of days of eld,
Who in council ever was wisest shown,
Nestor, their flight withheld :
For he spoke to them thus in sagest tone,
And their panic fear dispelled.

XIX.

“ ‘ Argives,’ he said, ‘ your steps restrain,
Achaia’s sons do not flee ;
His mother is rising from out the main, 55
With all the immortal sea-nymph train,
The corse of her son to see.’

XX.

“ The flight was checked—and round thee came
The maids of the sea-god old ;
Sad weeping as they wrapt thy frame
In vesture of heavenly fold.

XXI.

“ A mournful dirge the Muses nine
In strains alternate sung,
And from every eye the tearful brine
Through the Argive host was wrung ;
For none could withstand the lay divine
Of the Muse’s dulcet tongue.

60

XXII.

“ By day and night for ten days’ space —
For ten days’ space and seven,
Wept we the men of mortal race,
And the deathless gods of heaven.

XXIII.

“ And when the eighteenth morning came,
To the pile thy corse was borne ;
And many fat sheep were slain at the flame,
And steers of twisted horn.

65

XXIV.

“ With ointment rich upon the pyre,
And honey covered o’er,
There didst thou burn in rich attire,
Such as immortals wore.

XXV.

“ And many a hero-chief renowned Rushed forward, foot and horse,
The blazing death-pile to surround
Where burnt thine honored corse.

XXVI.

“The tumult was loud of that martial crowd, 70
Till the flame had consumed thee quite ;
And then, when the dawn of morning glowed,
We gathered thy bones so white.

XXVII.

“In waterless wine, and ointment fine,
When the fire had ceased to burn,
We laid those relics prized of thine
All in a golden urn.

XXVIII.

“This costly gift thy mother brought ;
And she said it was bestowed
By the god of Wine—a vessel wrought
By the Fire-working god. 75

XXIX.

“And there are laid thy bones so white,
Mingled, illustrious chief,
With his, thy friend, whose fall in fight
Wrought thee such mickle grief.

XXX.

“Those of Antilochus apart
Are stored—for, of all the host,
After Patroclus slain, thy heart
Him loved and honored most.

XXXI.

“And the Argive spearmen, gathering round,
Upraised a mighty heap, 80

For thy tomb, a large and lofty mound,
Upon a jutting steep.

XXXII.

“Landmark conspicuous there for aye,
By Helle’s waters wide,*
For men who may sail on a future day,
As for those of the present tide.

XXXIII.

“Thy mother then the gods besought,
And they gave what she chose to ask ; 85
And many a glorious prize she brought,
To be won by manly task.

XXXIV.

“I oft before, when heroes died,
Have joined beside their tomb
The youths of pride, who there to have tried
The feats of strength have come.

XXXV.

“But such store of prize ne’er met my eyes
As there that day was seen, 90
Which Thetis brought for thine obsequies,
The silver-footed queen.

* By Helle’s waters wide — ἐπὶ πλατείᾳ Ἑλλησπόντῳ.

There has been some disputation about the meaning of πλάτης in this passage ; and, even in ancient times, there was a suspicion that it did not mean wide, but salt. Clarke, the traveller, adopts this interpretation ; but it is needless : and, besides, the word bore no such meaning in the days of Homer. The Hellespont, considered as a river or a stream, is wide. I may remark that Lord Byron, in spite of all his boasting, did not perform the feat of Leander.—W. M.

XXXVI.

“Dear wert thou to the gods; and now,
Even in the world beneath,
Thy endless glory lies not low,
Achilles, with thy death.

XXXVII.

“For ever shall that deathless name
Among all mankind live;
For ever meed of glorious fame
Shall from all the world receive.”

VII.

The Introduction of Penelope.

FROM THE ODYSSEY.—Book I. 319-365.

MINERVA, in the appearance of Mentès, had visited Telemachus, and counselled him to seek his father. Inspired with a new feeling of independence, he joins the suitors, whom he finds at festival, listening to Phemius, the minstrel, whose song turns, as usual, on the Trojan war. Penelope hears the singer, and comes into the hall to request that some other subject than that which is so distressful to her feelings should be chosen. Telemachus gently rebukes her; and she retires, convinced that her son is about to take the lead in his father's house, to weep herself to slumber over the thoughts of her absent husband—while the suitors continue the noisy revel. She is the first mortal female who speaks in the Odyssey, and her first words attest the deep and enduring affection she feels for Ulysses. It may be remarked that Ulysses discovers himself in consequence of the song of the bard Demodocus, and Penelope appears in consequence of the song of the bard Phemius. The δοῖδοι are far more conspicuous in the Odyssey than the Iliad. Whether this is an indication that the Odyssey was the earlier or later poem may be a question. It is evident, from l. 350, 351 of the following, that there were poems before either.

The Introduction of Penelope.

I.

SOON as Athené spoke the word, 319
She took the likeness of a bird.*
And, skyward soaring, fled.
The counsels of the heavenly guest
Within Telemachus's breast
New strength and spirit bred.

II.

His absent father to his thought
Was by his wakened memory brought
More freshly than of old :
But when Athené's flight he saw,
A feeling deep of reverend awe
His inmost heart controlled.

III.

He knew the stranger was a god ;
And hastening to his own abode,
He joined the suitor train.
A far-famed minstrel in the hall †

* "Ὀρνις δ' ὣς ἀνοπαῖα εὐπύματο' ἤν' ἐνὶ θυμῷ."

As the ancient authorities can not fix what bird this ἀνοπαῖα is intended to be, I have adopted the prudent course of not translating it at all, according to a very ordinary custom. I think it impossible, however, that it can bear the meaning of "invisible," which is given it by many translators, in different tongues.—W. M.

† I can not refrain from copying a French translation of this passage as far as l. 359, executed in the time when goût was predominant. It is by La Val-

Sang to the peers, who listened all
In silence to his strain.

325

IV.

As subject of his lay he chose
The mournful story of the woes
Borne by the Achaian host,
When, under Pallas' vengeful wrath,
Homeward returning was their path
Bent from the Trojan coast.

V.

The song Icarius' daughter heard,
And all thine inmost soul was stirred,
Penelope the chaste!
Straight did she from her bower repair
And passing down the lofty stair,
The festal hall she graced.

330

terie. The third edition, which is the only one I have seen, was published in 1708. It must, therefore, have been a favorite: "Durant leur entretien, Phémion avait continué de chanter, et Pénélope, suivie de quelques unes de ses femmes, était entrée dans la salle, où tous ses amans entendaient les admirables chansons. Lorsqu'il chanta un récit des tristes aventures des Grecs, qui avaient eu part à la conquête de Troie, la souvenir d'Ulysse la toucha si fort, que Télémaque, rentrant dans l'assemblée, trouva cette princesse toute en larmes. Phémion aurait été puni de son indiscretion, si le prince n'avait considéré que beaucoup d'autres grands hommes avaient eu part aux aventures dont Phémion avait parlé, qu'il avait moins considéré le sujet de son récit que la nouveauté de l'air, et la beauté du chant: et que de tout tems les actions des hommes les plus illustres ont été exposées aux vers des poètes."

The sentence I have marked in Italics appears to me particularly diverting; and yet it is not more anti-Homeric than the Télémaque of Fénelon, the style of which it somewhat resembles. La Valterie boasts, in his preface to the Iliad, which is written in the same manner, that he has done Homer the justice of making him speak in a manner worthy of the times of civilization.—W. M.

VI.

Alone she went not—in her train
She took with her handmaidens twain ;
And when the peerless queen
Came where the suitors sate, aloof
Close by a post that propped the roof,
She stood with face unseen.

VII.

A veil concealed her cheeks from view,
And by each side a handmaid true
In seemly order stood ;
With tears fast bursting from her eyne, 335
Addressing thus the bard divine,
She her discourse pursued :

VIII.

“ Phemius ! for men’s delight thy tongue
Can many another flowing song
In soothing measure frame ;
Can tell of many a deed, which done
By God or man in days bygone,
Bards have consigned to fame.

IX.

“ Take one of those, and all around,
Silent, will hear the dulcet sound,
Drinking the blood-red wine ;
But cease that melancholy lay 340
That wears my very heart away—
A heavy wo is mine !

X.

“How can I check the tide of grief,
Remembering still that far-famed chief,

Whose fame all Hellas fills?”

Answered her son, “Oh! mother mine!

345

Why dost thou blame the bard divine,

For singing as he wills?

XI.

“Blame not the poet—blame to Heaven,
Which to poor struggling men has given

What weight of wo it chose.

How can we charge the bard with wrong,

If the sad burden of his song

Turns on the Danaan woes?

350

XII.

“Men, ever with delighted ear,

The newest song desire to hear.

Then firmly to the strain

Listen, which tells of perils done:

My sire is not the only one

Who of the chiefs to Ilion gone

Has not returned again.

355

XIII.

“For many, to that fatal shore

Who sailed away, came back no more:

Thy business is at home,

Thy servant-maidens to command,

And ply, with an industrious hand,

The distaff, and the loom.

XIV.

“To men, the guiding power must be,
At all times, in these halls to me;

For here my will is law.”

The queen went homeward, as he bade,
And felt the words her son had said

360

Inspired her soul with awe.

XV.

Soon did she, with her handmaids twain,
Her lofty seated chamber gain.

And there, with many a tear,
Until Athené came to steep
Her weary lids in balmy sleep,
Did chaste Penelope be-weep

Her absent husband dear.
While, seated still at festival,
The suitors, in the dusky hall,

Revelled with noisy cheer.

365

VIII.

The Last Appearance of Penelope.

FROM THE ODYSSEY.—Book XXIII. 289-343.

I HAVE chosen this passage as a sort of pendant to that which appeared in the last number ; but I confess that I think the lines from v. 310 to 343 are interpolated. They seem to be the production of a scholiast or commentator, summing up in a few lines what had been already told at length. Besides, they are not in the flowing Homeric manner, and they contain at least one word which can with difficulty be reconciled to its ordinary use in Homer. I refer to ἀδινάων, v. 326, on which Buttmann, more suo, blunders absurdly. They are very ancient and harmonious verses, however, and the part which is undoubtedly Homeric is a beautiful conclusion of the character of Penelope ; cautious and guarded, from the unhappy necessity of her position, but ever chaste and domestic ; and, when convinced that her husband has indeed returned, as warm and affectionate in his presence as her thoughts had been constant and tender toward him in his absence.

.

The Last Appearance of Penelope.

I.

A BED of texture soft and fine 289
The nurse and the handmaiden spread;
The couch was decked by torchlight shine,
And homeward then the old woman sped.
While Eurynome, as a chamber-groom,
With lamp in hand, to the nuptial room
The new-met partners led.

II.

Thither she led them, and withdrew,
And left them, as in days of old, 295
Their former dalliance to renew
In joyous passion uncontrolled.
And the herd of swine, and the herd of kine,
With the heir of Ithaca's royal line,
Bade the house its peace to hold.

III.

The dance was checked as they desired,
The sound of woman's voice repressed;
In silence then they all retired
Within the darkening halls to rest.
And when was done love's dearest rite, 300
Husband and wife with calm delight
Their mutual thoughts expressed.

IV.

She told him of the scorn and wrong
She long had suffered in her house,
From the detested suitor throng,
Each wooing her to be his spouse.
How, for their feasts, her sheep and kine
Were slaughtered, while they quaffed her wine
In plentiful carouse.

305

V.

And he, the noble wanderer, spoke
Of many a deed of peril sore—
Of men who fell beneath his stroke—
Of all the sorrowing tasks he bore.
She listened, with delighted ear—
Sleep never came her eyelids near,
Till all the tale was o'er.

VI.

First told he how the Cicones
He had subdued with valiant hand,
And how he reached across the seas,
The Lotus-eaters' lovely land;
The crimes by Polyphemus done,
And of the well-earned vengeance won,
For slaughter of his band.

310

VII.

Vengeance for gallant comrades slain,
And by the Cyclops made a prey;
And how it was his lot to gain
The isle where Æolus holds sway;

And how the Monarch of the wind
Received him with a welcome kind,
And would have sent away,

VIII.

Home to his native isle to sail;
But vainly against fate he strove, 315
By whom unroused a desperate gale
Over the fishy ocean drove,
And sent him wandering once again,
The toils and dangers of the main
With many a groan to prove.

IX.

And how he wandered to the coast
Where dwells the distant Læstrygon;
How there his ships and friends he lost,
Escaping in his bark alone;
He spoke of Circe's magic guile,
And told the art and deep-skilled wile
By the enchantress shown. 320

X.

Then how to Hades' grisly hall
He went to seek the Theban seer,
In his swift ship; how there with all
The partners of his long career
He met; and how his mother mild,
Who bore, and reared him from a child,
He saw while wandering there. 325

XI.

And how the dangerous strain he heard,
Sung by the Sirens' thrilling tongue;

And how with dexterous skill he steered
His course the justling rocks among ;
How he — what none had done before —
Unscathed through dread Charybdis bore,
And Scylla sailed along.

XII.

And how the oxen of the sun
With impious hand his comrades slew ; 330
How their devoted bark upon
High thundering Jove his lightning threw ;
How by the bolt of life bereft,
Perished his friends, he only left
Remaining of the crew.

XIII.

And how, in the Ogygian isle,
He visited Calypso fair ;
And how she sought, with many a wile, —
To keep him still sojourning there :
With fond desire 'twas hers to crave,
That he, within her hollow cave,
Her nuptial bed should share.

XIV.

Each hospitable art she tried,
His heart to win — his hopes to soothe ; 335
She promised him, were she his bride
Immortal life, and ceaseless youth.
But all her promise, all her art,
Changed not the temper of his heart,
Nor shook his steadfast truth.

XV.

How, after many a year of toil,
When on Phæacian land he trod,
The king and people of the isle
Hailed him with honors of a god;
And sent him full of presents fair, 340
Of gold, and brass, and garments rare,
Back to his own abode.

XVI.

So closed the tale. Then balmy sleep,
The healer of all human woes,
Did their relaxing members steep
In soft oblivion of repose. 343

* * * * *

IX.

The Prophecy of Theoclymenus the Seer.

FROM THE ODYSSEY.—Book XX. 345-374.

THEOCLYMENUS was the prototype of the jongleurs, or wandering minstrels, men of good blood, ready to kill their man, or to sing in bower and hall, or to predict coming events—or, in fact, to do any thing that irregular genius, backed by a courage not to be daunted but by the prospect of labor of any kind, has ever delighted in. Welcome guests they were wherever they turned their footsteps; bold was their bearing, high their claims to birth and rank, ready their hand in brawl or combat; but they sate ever at the tables of others. It might be instructive, certainly, if well done—it would be extremely amusing to compare the manners of all classes of the Homeric characters with those of the period which immediately followed what we call the dark ages, and preceded immediately the days when reviving literature heralded our present system of civilized life. We could find in them every character of the Iliad and Odyssey. But the vates sacer did not arise. Properly to perform the task at which I have hinted would require more research and knowledge than, perhaps, the subject is worth.

The first appearance of Theoclymenus is extremely graphic. Telemachus is on the point of weighing from Pylos, on his return homeward. I shall leave Pope to tell the rest.

“ When, lo ! a wretch ran breathless to the shore,
New from his crime, and reeking yet with gore.
A seer he was, from great Melampus sprung,
Melampus, who in Pylos flourished long,
Till, urged by wrongs, a foreign realm he chose,
Far from the hateful cause of all his woes.
Neleus his treasures one long year detains ;
As long he groan’d in Philaeus’s chains :
Meantime, what anguish and what rage combined,
For lovely Pero rack’d his laboring mind !
Yet ’scap’d he death ; and vengeful of his wrong,
To Pylos drove the lowing herds along :
Then (Neleus vanquished, and consign’d the fair
To Bias’ arms) he sought a foreign air ;
Argos the rich for his retreat he chose ;
There form’d his empire, there his palace rose.
From him Antiphates and Mantius came :
The first begot Oïcleus great in fame,
And he Amphiaraus, immortal name !
The people’s savior, and divinely wise,
Beloved by Jove, and him who gilds the skies,
Yet short his date of life ! by female pride he dies.
From Mantius Clitus, whom Aurora’s love
Snatch’d for his beauty to the thrones above ;
And Polyphides, on whom Phæbus shone
With fullest rays, Amphiaraus now gone ;
In Hyperesia’s groves he made abode,
And taught mankind the counsels of the god.
From him sprung Theoclymenus, who found
(The sacred wine yet foaming on the ground)
Telemachus : whom, as to heaven he prest
His ardent vows, the stranger thus address.

O thou ! that dost thy happy course prepare
With pure libations and with solemn prayer ;
By that dread power to whom thy vows are paid ;
By all the lives of these ; thy own dear head,
Declare sincerely to no foe’s demand
Thy name, thy lineage, and paternal land.

Prepare, then, said Telemachus, to know
A tale from falsehood free, not free from woe.
From Ithaca, of royal birth, I came,

And great Ulysses (ever honor'd name !)
 Was once my sire, though now for ever lost,
 In Stygian gloom he glides a pensive ghost !
 Whose fate inquiring through the world we rove ;
 The last, the wretched proof of filial love.
 The stranger then. Nor shall I aught conceal,
 But the dire secret of my fate reveal.
 Of my own tribe an Argive wretch I slew ;
 Whose powerful friends the luckless deed pursue
 With unrelenting rage, and force from home
 The bloodstain'd exile, ever doom'd to roam.
 But bear, oh bear me o'er yon azure flood !
 Receive the suppliant ! spare my destin'd blood !
 Stranger (replied the prince), securely rest
 Affianced in our faith ; henceforth our guest.
 Thus affable, Ulysses' goldlike heir
 Takes from the stranger's hand the glittering spear :
 He climbs the ship, ascends the stern with haste,
 And by his side the guest accepted placed."

It would be useless to point out the hundred minor inaccuracies in these lines. What those who read Pope and Homer together materially complain of, is the total discrepancy of thought and feeling between the poet and his translator. In the above, I shall only give one instance. Theoclymenus has fled Argos—ἄνδρα κατὰκτὰς—"having killed a man." Homer says nothing further—it was an accident that might happen to any gentleman of the best regulated family, and entailed neither disgrace nor remorse. Times had altered between the days of Agamemnon and Anne, and those plain words gave way, for

"When, lo ! a wretch ran breathless to the shore,
 New from his crime, and reeking yet with gore ;"

which, by the way, he could not have been, as he had come from Argos to Pylos. After the prophet has carefully ascertained who it is he addresses, from a due caution lest the stranger might be one of the kindred of the slain man, he at once says, on learning that Telemachus was absent from home, "I, too, as you are, am out of my country, in consequence of having killed a man of my tribe." Not a word of its being "the dire secret of his fate," or of "the luckless deed," or of "the unrelenting rage" of the relations of the dead (whose determination to kill him in return he would have considered perfectly correct): still less does he call his antagonist "an Argive wretch," or himself "a bloodstained exile." These are ideas of a totally different state of society. Theoclymenus had killed a man of his own rank—nothing could be more regular; the relations of the slain vowed mortal vengeance—regular again; and the prophet, not having power to oppose them, fled. Every thing was conducted with the strictest propriety; and Telemachus, the πεπνυμένος, with equal propriety, receives the man in difficulties without a word. On their arrival in Ithaca, the prince proposes to go to the farm in the country, while his sailors make for the town; on which, according to Pope,

"Then Theoclymenus: But who shall lend,
 Meantime, protection to thy stranger friend?
 Straight to the queen and palace shall I fly,
 Or yet, more distant, to some lord apply?"

Protection? Fly? To some lord apply? This from Theoclymenus, of the house of Neleus by the female line; of Melapus by the male; a cousin of Nestor, "the great glory of the Grecians," and of the warrior-prophet Amphiaraus, "who perished at Thebes, betrayed for gifts bestowed on a woman;" connected, of course, with the noblest of the heroic houses—he ask to what lord he should apply? as if he was a poet of modern day, looking for a subscription: or inquire, after having received the plighted friendship of Telemachus, whether he should fly for protection to his mother! The prophet said nothing of the kind. (You are going to the country, your crew to the town.) "Where, then, am I to go, my dear boy? Shall I go to the houses of any of the men who bear sway in craggy Ithaca, or straight to your mother and your own house?" This is the version of the Greek word for word: in modern phrases, "As I see you are engaged in business of your own, where am I to dine and sleep? Shall I stop at the house of any of your friends, among the surrounding gentry, or go straight and call upon your mother, and put up at yours at once?" They soon after vowed eternal friendship, in consequence of the favorable interpretation given by the seer to an omen; and the stranger is instantly recommended to the care of a particular friend, with whom he soon makes himself quite at home (Od. xvii. 71-84). He, of course, is present at the fatal banquet given by the suitors, and there pronounces his prophetic malediction. Ctesippus had flung the foot of an ox, which he took off the table, at Ulysses, and missed him (could we not find, without going so far as the heroes of Odin, similar traits of manners elsewhere?), which called forth the angry rebuke of Telemachus, and the mild remonstrance of Agelaus, one of the suitors. The last insult had now been offered, and the hour of their fate was at hand. It came upon them in the midst of revel, when they were full of bread. Even Maximus Tyrius grows poetical in his criticism on this passage:—"Seest thou not the suitors engaged together in youthful pleasures, eating fat goats, filling themselves with tender kids, listening to the sound of music, mixing wine, amusing themselves with quoits, and flinging javelins in sport? Who would not have pronounced them happy in the midst of their gaiety? But the sneer, inspired with a full knowledge of the future, says, 'Wretched men, what evil is this?' &c.; for the evil was at their feet, and hard by."

The Prophecy of Theoclymenus the Seer.

I.

AS Pallas bade, the suitor train 345
Into mad fits of mirth are thrown ;
You scarce had deemed the jaws they strain —
So fierce the laughter* — were their own.

II.

The flesh they eat with blood o'erflows,
With gushing tears are filled their eyne ;

* Οἱ δ' ἥδη γναθμοῖσι γελοίων ἀλλοτρίοισιν.

Malis ridentem alienis. I have endeavored to give what became the popular proverbial meaning of this phrase in Greece, and among the Romans, who interpreted Homer according to the more modern Grecians. They laughed so immoderately, and so unsparingly of their jaws, that we should not have thought them their own. They laughed as with other men's jaws, as people are sometimes charged with riding other men's horses, at a different pace from that to which they put their own. But I can not help thinking the interpretation of Eustathius, that "laughing with foreign jaws," is some thing of the same kind of phrase as ἀχρεῖον ἐγέλασσε. She (Penelope ; it occurs Od. Σ. 162) laughed not merely "uselessly," but in a manner that, so far from affording pleasure or use, was precisely of the contrary description. The suitors were evidently drunk, and did not know what they laughed or cried about. Here we have them roaring immoderately in laughter ; but the jaws with which they laughed were no longer under their control — they were as the jaws of other men. In the next line, their eyes are filled with tears, and an indefinable fear of misfortune falls upon them. The Pallas Athene, who had made their minds to wander (l. 346) was the deity who lay at the bottom of the flagons of wine they had been carousing. The conduct of the whole party in all particulars shows that they did not know what they were saying or doing ; and they, therefore, fall easy, and indeed almost unresisting victims to Ulysses.—W. M.

And, while each heart impending woes
Presaged, uprose the seer divine.

350

III.

"What is the fate of evil doom
Now threatening you, unhappy race?
I see that night in thickest gloom
Wraps every limb, and form, and face.*

IV.

"Outbursts like fire the voice of moan,
Drowned are your cheeks with sorrow's flood;
And every wall and pillared stone
Is soaked and dabbled in your blood.

V.

"Through hall and porch, full many a ghost
Crowds toward the mansion of the dead;
'The sun from out the heavens is lost,
And clouds of darkness rushing spread."

355

VI.

He ceased, and they with jocund cheer
Into glad peals of laughter broke.
Eurymachus addressed the seer,
And thus in taunting accents spoke:

VII.

"Mad is the new-come guest. 'Tis meet
Instant to chase him from our sight;

360

* Εἰλδεται κεφαλαί τε πρόσωπά τε νέρθε τε γούνα.

I have translated after γούνα, the reading of Plato.—W. M.

To turn toward haunts of men his feet,
 Since he mistakes the day for night." *

VIII.

Then thus replied the seer divine :
 " From thee no guide shall I request,
 For eyes, and ears, and feet, are mine,
 And no weak soul inspires my breast.† 365

IX.

" Then from this fated house I go ;
 Swift comes the destined vengeance on ;
 None shall escape the deadly blow
 Of all the suitors — no, not one.

X.

" Not one of those, who now so long
 Have in this mansion held control,
 With words of insult on the tongue,
 And schemes of baseness in the soul." 370

XI.

He went ; and as a welcome guest,
 Piræus' friendly halls he found.

* Εἰς ἀγορὴν ἔρχεσθαι· ἐπεὶ τὰδε νυκτὶ εἶσκει.

There has been some difference of opinion about this passage. I think the meaning is plain. " This fellow is mad. Send him away from us, into the street or market, where people congregate : it is necessary that he should be guided by the testimony of others, as he thinks that this is night. They will tell him it is day."—W. M.

† " Unguided, hence my trembling steps I bend."—POPE.

It is amusing to see how this misconception runs through all his translation.—W. M.

The suitors, at the dizzy feast,
Each on the other glanced around ;
And turned the stranger into jest,
'Telemachus's heart to wound.

X.

The Story of the Swineherd.

FROM THE ODYSSEY.—Book XV. 389-483.

ULYSSES, after having given a most mendacious account of himself, inquires from the hospitable swineherd the history of his adventures. The manner in which he introduces his inquiry gives a pleasant picture of the ordinary adventures of the time. Eumæus had told him that he was reared from childhood as a slave in the household of Laertes ; on which Ulysses says—“How strange it is, swineherd Eumæus, that you were tossed abroad to wander away from your country and your parents while still a child. Tell me, then, and accurately relate, was the broad-streeted city sacked in which your father and venerable mother dwelt ? or did pirates carry you off in their vessels, finding you left alone among the sheep or oxen, and sell you to this master, who paid for you the regular price ?” There is something truly business-like in the manner of this inquiry. “And the swineherd, chief of men, immediately replied”—

The Story of the Swinherd.

I.

O STRANGER, if it be thy will 390
My life's whole course to know,
Listen in silence seated still,
While with my tale the hours I fill,
Over the goblet's flow.

II.

The long and tedious night's career
Leaves time enough for sleep,
Enough a pleasant tale to hear,
Which those who lend attentive ear
From slumber dull will keep.

III.

Repose not till the hour assigned ;
Harm by much sleep is done.
Let him who feels of drowsier mind,
Departing outward, lie reclined,
Till the up-dawning sun. 395

IV.

When, with the porkers of his lord,
He from his meal may go ;
We, seated here beside the board,
Eating and drinking, will record
Each other's tales of wo.

V.

Sweet is, of perils past and o'er, 400
The story, treasured well—
Of all the sufferings that we bore :
Our wanderings on a foreign shore—
Such as I now shall tell.

VI.

Where turns the sun to set and rise,
All to Ortygia's north,
Thou may'st have heard that Syria lies,
An island of no passing size,
But excellent of worth. 405

VII.

In flocks and kine, in corn and wine,
Abundant is its soil ;
There never famine makes to pine,
No maladies to wo consign
The dwellers of the soil.

VIII.

When to the years that suit the tomb
Its aged sons attain,
Then Artemis and Phœbus come, 410
The Archer-gods, to seal their doom,
By painless arrows slain.

IX.

Two are its cities, and the land
'Twixt them is parted free ;

O'er both my sire with regal hand,
Ctesius, the godlike, held command;
Of Ormenus son was he.

X.

And often the Phœnicians sought
This island o'er the main. 415
And their ship-famed men of wily thought
Many curious toys in the galleys brought,
To barter them there for gain.

XI.

There chanced in my father's house to be
A woman of their land;
And tall was she, and fair to see,
And in works of art right skilfully
Practised was she of hand.

XII.

Her beauty made her fall a prey
To sailor arts ere long;
To bathe when she had ta'en her away,
In a seaman's arms in the ship she lay, 420
Won by his glozing tongue.

XIII.

Women are weak : the deffest dame
By like deceit may fall.
He asked, Who was she? Whence she came?
And at once did she as her dwelling name
My father's high-roofed hall.

XIV.

“ Rich Sidon is my native source,
Rich Arybas my sire ; 425
As from the fields I bent my course,
I by a Taphian pirate-force
Was seized, and here, without remorse,
Sold for the stated hire.”

XV.

Spoke then the man, in whose embrace
She secretly had lain : 430
“ Wilt thou with us thy path retrace,
To see once more thy natal place,
Thy father’s halls again ?

XVI.

“ Them to see ? they still survive,
Rich in abundant store.”
“ Be it so ; your offer I receive,” 435
She said ; “ but ye some pledge must give
To bring me safe to shore.

XVII.

“ Swear this with solemn oath and true,
And, sailors, yours am I.”
Then, as she bade, did all the crew
Take the firm oath in manner due,
And duly ratify.

XVIII.

“ Be secret now,” the woman cried ;
“ Should any from the ship 440

Henceforth to meet with me betide,
In market wide, or at fountain side,
Be closed to me his lip ;

XIX.

“ Lest some one to my master old
Should our discourse betray ;
And he, suspecting from what is told,
Should bind me fast in fetters fold,
And plot your crew to slay.

XX.

“ But keep the secret safely stored,
And your purchase of victuals ply :
When your full stock is laid on board,
Let some one to me, with speedy word,
At yonder mansion hie.

445

XXI.

“ And gold with me I shall surely bear,
Whatever to hand may come ;
And with willing mind, as a passage fare,
Shall bring you the boy whom as nurse I rear
In that rich man’s house at home.

450

XXII.

“ He now can run abroad by my side,
And the child is sharp and smart ;
Him then shall I to your vessel guide,
And a handsome price he will sure provide,
When sold at a foreign mart.”

XXIII.

She said, and then the house she sought :
 In the isle for a year they staid.
 Provision in store for their ship they bought, 455
 And when the vessel was fully fraught,
 Their messenger was sped.

XXIV.

Crafty was he whom the sailors sent
 To take the message sure ;
 To my father's house his way he bent,
 And a necklace of gold with amber blent
 He brought with him as a lure. 460

XXV.

With favoring hand and longing eye,
 My venerated dame*
 Did with her household maidens try,
 The trinket, which they fain would buy.
 Whate'er the price he would name.

XXVI.

He winked at the woman, and went his way ;
 In silence he gave the sign.
 With my hand in hers, I was led away, 465
 Through the porch where many a goblet lay
 Left where they had met to dine.

XXVII.

My father had gone with every guest,
 The public court to keep ;

* Mother ; — the original is μήτηρ.—M.

And she hid three goblets under her vest,
And I, with a foolish mind possessed,
Followed her to the deep. 470

XXVIII.

Down sank the sun, and dark was the street,
And soon we came to the bay,
Where lay the Phœnician galley fleet;
They put us on board, and at once we beat
Fast over the watery way.

XXIX.

Fair was the wind, vouchsafed by Jove; 475
Six days before the blast,
Day and night, in constant course, we drove;
The seventh day was doomed to prove
That Phœnician woman's last.

XXX.

Her Artemis' fatal arrows slew;
And with a noisy force,
She fell as plump as sea-coots do, 480
Into the sink, and then they threw
To the seals and fish her corse.

XXXI.

And sadly I was left behind;
But soon to Ithaca's shore
Wafted were we by wave and wind;
To Laertes by sale was I consigned;—
And now my tale is o'er. 484

* * I had intended to write a few notes on the above, but, on reflection, I do not wish to encumber my readers with too much Greek. In brief, then, I have only to say, that though I have translated θεσσειν ἀνακτορήριον “porkers of his lord,” according to the ordinary interpretation, I think the latter word has no connection with ἄναξ; that Buttmann, as usual, is a blockhead, about ἀθέσφατος, which merely means cursed, as we say a cursedly long night; that τροπαί, l. 403, is a corruption—I have rendered it according to the best interpretation I could find, and the commentators on the passage, who find Homer guilty of geographical or astronomical mistakes, are very foolish persons; that there is a line wanting after l. 423; that ναῦται should be ναῦτα, l. 435; that 437 is an interpolation; that ἔμοσαν and τελεῦτησαν, l. 438, should be in the singular number; that ὥς, l. 479, perhaps, should be φῆ; and that Turnebus's note on ἀγαυοῖς is trash, though backed by Heraclides Ponticus, and in a measure, adopted by Clarke. Also, for ἀπώμνονον, l. 437, read ἐπώμνονον, after the manuscript collated by Thomas Bentley; and, meo periculo, for ἀματροχόωντα, l. 451, which has, in Eustathius, the various reading of ἑμοτροχόωντα, read οἰοτροχόωντα, “running alone.”

What a commentary could be written on the story beginning with l. 415, and ending with 484! Does any thing connected with human life change? All this story of Eumæus might have occurred on the coasts of old Calibar, in the slave-trade time, and, in spite of the zeal and energy of Governor Maclean,* may occur at Cape Coast even at present.—W. M.

* The late Captain Maclean, husband of the gifted and unfortunate L. E. L., Governor of the British settlement at Cape Coast, Africa, in 1838, and for several years later, until his death there.—M.

XI.

The Beaten Beggarman.

FROM THE ODYSSEY.—Book XVIII. 1-116.

THE contest of Ulysses and Irus, which occupies the first 116 lines of the 18th Odyssey, is a favorite passage among the ancient critics, who evidently consider it to be, what in vulgar, but expressive language, we should call a capital piece of fun. Dionysius of Halicarnassus is inclined to trace to it the origin of comedy. “Hence [from Homer], perhaps, comedy had its origin. In the midst of his gravest and most sublime matters, we find laughter-moving episodes—as, for instance, when the beggarman Irus, in the Odyssey, is put up by the dissipated suitors to challenge the most noble Ulysses [γενναϊοτάτῳ Ὀδυσσεὶ] to a boxing match, and turns out to be only fit for laughing at.” Some philosophy follows, not worth translating. Eustathius chuckles over the incident, though he is bound to think it not consistent with epic dignity. The poet, he remarks, who is grim (σκυθρωπὸς) and rough (ἄγριος) in the Iliad, relaxes into ten thousand jocularities in the Odyssey; as nurses indulge children, so he gives the ~~ton~~ to his more tender and simple-minded hearers (ἰδέως τιτθεύει τοῦς ἀπαλωτέρους καὶ ἀπλουστέρους ἀκροατάς). This passage of the comment of Eustathius is evidently corrupt, but the meaning is as I have given it. The many allusions to Irus in the classical authors mark the popularity of the incident.

As I do not believe that Homer is σκυθρωπὸς or ἄγριος in the Iliad, I can not think that he has deviated into good-humored or rough jocularity in the Odyssey, for the benefit of the babes and sucklings of literature. The scene in the second book of the Iliad, where Ulysses belabors the impudent Thersites with a cudgel—for the σκῆπτρον of the heroic ages was nothing more—is essentially of the same character as the belaboring of the impudent Irus with his fists, in the Odyssey. He rebuked the one as a king, chastising an inferior with authority undisputed; the other, his disguised condition compelled him to meet as an equal, and to punish, not as invested with any conventional superiority, but as the man of courage punishes the coward. In both cases the braggart is the victim of his own insolence, and the feeling of the poet is in both identical.

What is and what is not epic and poetic dignity would waste a long volume to discuss. One thing is, however, very observable. Homer, Æschylus, Dante, Shakespeare, Milton—I pass the inferior names of Hesiod, Euripides, Sophocles, Ariosto, Calderon, Camoens, Goethe, and a score of others—have been vehemently accused of bad taste, in admitting puns and trivial incidents into their poems. Many very respectable authors and critics have been so good as to extenuate, because they could not defend, practices so reprehensible. Did it ever strike these gentlemen, that what to the greatest minds of the world appeared not inconsistent with their splendid reveries, might not need defence, or regard attack from the 'meanest minds in that same world, viz. the critics of goût? No! That would be the last thought to cross the self-sufficient brains of the self-constituted authorities of "polite literature."

In the following lines, Irus, a town-beggar, sees Ulysses, disguised as a mendicant, at the house-gate of the royal residence of Ithaca, and wishes to drive off the intruder on his dues. The suitors indulge in the amusement of seeing the two beggarmen fight; and the result is consistent with poetic justice. I fear that in real life the sturdy beggar is not always unsuccessful against the true man.

The Beaten Beggarman.

I.

THERE came the public beggarman, who all throughout the town 1
Of Ithaca, upon his quest for alms, begged up and down ;
Huge was his stomach, without cease for meat and drink craved
he :
No strength, no force his body had, though vast it was to see.

II.

He got as name from parent dame, Arnæus, at his birth, 5
But Irus was the nickname given by gallants in their mirth ;
For he, where'er they chose to send, their speedy errands bore,
And now he thought to drive away Odysseus from his door.

III.

"Depart, old man ! and quit the porch," he cried with insult coarse,
"Else quickly by the foot thou shalt be dragged away by force : 10
Dost thou not see, how here on me, their eyes are turned by all,
In sign to bid me stay no more, but fling thee from the hall ?

IV.

"Tis only shame that holds me back ; so get thee up and go !
Or ready stand with hostile hand to combat blow for blow."
Odysseus said, as stern he looked with angry glance, "My friend,
Nothing of wrong in deed or tongue do I to thee intend. 15

V.

"I grudge not whatsoe'er is given, how great may be the dole,
 The threshold is full large for both; be not of envious soul.
 It seems 'tis thine, as well as mine, a wanderer's life to live,
 And to the gods alone belongs, a store of wealth to give.

VI.

"But do not dare me to the blow, nor rouse my angry mood;— 20
 Old as I am, thy breast and lips might stain my hands with blood.
 To-morrow free I then from thee the day in peace would spend,
 For never more to gain these walls thy beaten limbs would bend."

VII.

"Heavens! how this glutton glibly talks," the vagrant Irus
 cried; 25
 "Just as an old wife loves to prate, smoked at the chimney side.*
 If I should smite him, from his mouth the shattered teeth were torn,
 As from the jaws of plundering swine, caught rooting up the corn.†

* Γρητ καμινοῖ ἴσος· ὃν ἂν κακὰ μητισαίμην.

I have taken both interpretations of this word. In one meaning the old woman is called a chimney-hunter, because she is chatty, talkative, πολύλαλος; in another, because she is blackened with the ashes: διὰ τὸ ἐπιφαινόμενον μέλαν, ὡς οἶον ἐκ τινὸς ἀσβολῆς. I do not well understand the explanation given by Aristarchus and Herodian, quoted by Clarke from Eustathius.—W. M.

† Γναθμῶν ἐξελάσαιμι, σπῆς ὧς ληϊβοτείρης.

The scholiast informs us, that when swine are caught rooting the corn, their teeth are drawn for the offence. Ælian assures us that it is a special

VIII.

"Come, gird thee for the fight, that they our contest may behold. 30

If thou'lt expose to younger arms thy body frail and old."
So in debate engaged they sate upon the threshold stone,
Before Odysseus' lofty gate wrangling in angry tone.

IX.

Antinous marked, and with a laugh the suitors he addressed :
"Never, I ween, our gates have seen so gay a cause of jest ; 35
Some god, intent on sport, has sent this stranger to our hall,
And he and Irus mean to fight : so set we on the brawl."

X.

Gay laughed the guests, and straight arose, on frolic errand bound, 40
About the ragged beggarmen a ring they made around.
Antinous cries, "A fitting prize for the combat I require,
Paunches of goat you see are here now lying on the fire ;

XI.

' This dainty food all full of blood, and fat of savory taste,
Intended for our evening's meal, there to be cooked we placed. 45
Which ever of these champions bold may chance to win the day,
Be he allowed which paunch he will to choose and bear away.

law in Salamis ; adding, that it was supposed, that if swine ate green corn it makes their teeth rotten. Clarke says that this explicatio is "satis inepta." Perhaps so ; but I do not think the law which enacted the tooth-drawing of swine very wise. It certainly would not much tend to improve the quality of the pork.—W. M.

And he shall at our board henceforth partake our genial cheer,
No other beggarman allowed the table to come near."

XII.

They all agreed, and then upspoke the chief of many a wile : 50

"Hard is it when ye match with youth age overrun with toil;
The belly,* counsellor of ill, constrains me now to go,
Sure to be beaten in the fight with many a heavy blow.

* "Ἀνδρα γέροντα, δὴ ἀρημέων ἀλλά με γαστήρ.

Eustathius doubts whether this γαστήρ is that of Ulysses, or of the goat frying on the fire. The epithet κακοεργὸς is supposed to settle the question in favor or disfavor of the former. We are referred to P. 286, γαστέρα . . . οὐλομένην, ἣ πολλὰ κῆκ' ἀνθρώπος δίδωσι. Seneca says, "Cum ventre humano tibi negotium est; nec rationem patitur, nec ulla prece flectitur populus esuriens." The readers of Rabelais will remember the wonders of the court of Gaster, master of arts; and as he has taken the degree from Persius, I volunteer a translation of the introduction to the satires, in which that important functionary is dubbed Artium Magister ingenique largitor.

"Nec fonte labra prolui caballino,
Nec in bicipiti somniasse Parnasso
Memini, ut repente sic poëta prodirem.
Heliconidasque pallidamque Pirenen
Illis remitto, quorum imagines lambunt
Hederæ sequaces: ipse semipaganus
Ad sacra vaturn carmen affero nostrum.
Quis expedit psittaco suum Χαῖρε,
Picasque docuit verba nostra conari?
Magister artis ingenique largitor
Venter, negatas artifex sequi voces.
Quod si dolosi spes refulerit nummi,
Corvos poëtas at poëtridas picas
Cantare credas Pegaseium nectar."

"I never of the horse-hoof fountain
Remember to have sipped the streams,
Nor on Parnassus' two-topped mountain
Slumbered to woo-inspiring dreams,
As to come forth at once a poet;
But all the tribe of Helicon,

XIII.

“But plight your troth with solemn oath, that none will raise his hand 55

My foe to help with aid unfair, while I before him stand.”

They took the covenant it had pleased Odysseus to propose ;
And his word to plight the sacred might of Telemachus arose. 60

Or pale Pirene, I bestow it
To those who for their busts have won
The well-earned wreath of ivy clinging ;
As for myself, but half a clown,
My own rude verses I am bringing
To join the sacred bards in town ;
Who helps poor Poll to cry ‘ Good day, sir ?
Who to the joy our speech imparts ?
The belly, of all wit the raiser ;
The belly, master first of arts.
He ’tis who knows of tongues forbidden
Plainly the ready way to teach ;
Show us where shines a treasure hidden,
As bright shall shine our parts of speech.
The bard or bardess who more hoarse is
Than croaking crows or chattering pies,
Who will not then believe discourses
Most Pegaseian melodies ?”

Ulysses elsewhere speaks in angry terms of the belly, H. 216, οὐ γάρ τι στυγερῇ ἐπὶ γαστέρι κύντερον ἄλλο, &c. ; a passage which offends the delicacy of Athenæus, who is followed by Bishop Blomfield in his note on Callimachus’ Hymn, εἰς Δήμητρος καλᾶθον, l. 88. After the bishop has made a very unhappy attempt at an emendation, he proceeds to say, “Notum est proverbium παχεῖα γαστήρ λεπτόν οὐ τίκει νόον. Cæterum tota hæc descriptio [that of Erisichthon eating all before him] sordidissima est, et infra Hymni dignitatem longe posita. Callimachus, ut opinor, imitari voluit ætatis Homericæ simplicitatem. In Odys. H. 215 seqq. Ulysses similia de se prædicat, quo nomine merito ab Athenæo reprehenditur, x. p. 412. C.” There is not the smallest similarity between the passages in Callimachus and Homer, as any one will see on inspection. Erisichthon, who, as a πανάμερος εἰλαπιναστὰς ἦσθιε μυρία πάντα, is a very different person from Ulysses complaining of the necessity imposed on mankind of attending under all circumstances to the call of hunger. Alcinous had just before suspected him to be a god. This Ulysses at once contradicts, and deplores that he is obliged to submit to the ordinary

XIV.

"If," he exclaimed, "thy spirit bold, and thy courageous heart
Should urge thee from the palace gate to force this man to part,
Thou needst not fear that any here will strike a fraudulent blow;
Who thus would dare his hand to rear must fight with many a foe.

XV.

"Upon me falls within these halls the stranger's help to be;
Antinous and Eurymachus, both wise, will join with me." 65
All gave assent, and round his loins his rags Odysseus tied:
Then was displayed each shoulder-blade of ample form and wide.

XVI.

His shapely thighs of massive size were all to sight confessed,
So were his arms of muscle strong, so was his brawny breast; 70
Athene close at hand each limb to nobler stature swelled;
In much amaze did the suitors gaze, when they his form beheld.

wants of human nature. The conclusion of Blomfield's note is worth copying, as coming from the pen of a man destined to be a bishop [of London; appointed in 1825]. "Hac loca miror non prolata esse à Mazochio Spicileg. in Genes, p. 194, ubi inter alia argumenta, quibus nititur ostendere homines in primævis temporibus decemipedites, vel τρισκαίδεκα πόχεις fuisse, præter vivacitatem eorum ac miram corporis firmitudinem, etiam voracitatem allegat bonus canonicus." The bishop, therefore, considers it to be a natural propensity of all good canons to be inclined in favor of voracity. If his Callimachus comes to another edition, perhaps he may favor us with the result of his personal experience. He can be assisted by a canon of his own, the Rev. Sydney Smith.—W. M.

XVII.

"Irus un-Irused now,"* they said, "will catch his sought-for wo,

Judge by the hips which from his rags this old man stripped can show."

And Irus trembled in his soul; but soon the servants came, 75
Girt him by force, and to the fight dragged on his quivering frame.

XVIII.

There as he shook in every limb, Antinous spoke in scorn:

"'Twere better, bullying boaster, far, that thou hadst ne'er been born,

If thus thou quake and trembling shake, o'ercome with coward fear, 80

Of meeting with this aged man, worn down with toil severe.

XIX.

"I warn thee thus, and shall perform full surely what I say,
If, conqueror in the fight, his arm shall chance to win the day,
Epirus-ward† thou hence shalt sail, in sable bark, consigned
To charge of Echetus the king, terror of all mankind. 85

* Ἡ τάχα Ἴρος Αἴρος ἐπίσπιπτον κακὸν ἔξει·

α

"Irus will be un-Irused;" he will no longer be able to act as our messenger—our male Iris. His occupation is gone. Ὁ μηκέτι ἐσόμενος Ἴρος ἀλλὰ τεθνηξόμενος.—W. M.

† Πέμψω σ' ἠπειρόνδε, βαλὼν ἐν νηὶ μελαίνῃ,

I have ventured to imitate the Greek form in "Epirus-ward." There is abundance of authority for it. What this ἠπειρος was seemed not very clear; in the catalogue in the Iliad it is part of the dominions of Ulysses. Here it is evidently the Norfolk Island of Ithaca, and Echetus the Colonel Arthur of his time. [Sir George Arthur was Governor of Norfolk Island, in 1837, and very unpopular for his severity and strictness.—M.] The custom alluded to in l. 86 was not, and indeed is not, uncommon in the East. It was im-

XX.

“He'll soon deface all manly trace with unrelenting steel,
 And make thy sliced-off nose and ears for hungry dogs a meal.”
 He spoke, and with those threatening words filled Irus with fresh dread;
 And trembling more in every limb, he to the midst was led.

XXI.

Both raised their hands, and then a doubt passed through
 Odysseus' brain 90
 Should he strike him so, that a single blow would lay him with the slain,
 Or stretch him with a gentler touch prostrate upon the ground;
 On pondering well, this latter course the wiser one he found.*

proved upon in Ireland by O'Rourke, Prince of Breffny, husband of Devorghilla; and became the primary source of woe to the royal ragged race of Tara. Hanmer tells the story in Latin.—W. M.

* Ἡέ μιν ἦκ' ἐλάσσει τανύσσειν τ' ἐπὶ γαίῃ.

Ulysses, it will be seen, decides upon giving Irus only a gentle tap. What Homer's idea of gentleness could have been it is hard to say; for this light touch smashes the man's jaw-bone, knocks him down in a second, and leaves him vomiting red blood, howling and kicking upon the ground, with his teeth dashed out, unable to rise. It may be remarked, that in the heroic boxing-matches, in Homer, Theocritus, Virgil, &c., the champions have no notion of self-defence. A single blow generally decides. Clarke is quite delighted with the elegance of this description. “Pulcherrimè rem depingunt et quasi ob oculos possunt hæc verba.” The suitors who actually saw it felt, of course, infinitely delighted. They were ready to die of laughing, v. 99.
 None of the scruples of Pope found their way into the heroes of these times.
 He says:—

“Soon his life to save

The king resolves, for mercy sways the brave.”

But it would be hard to find this any where in Homer. The king's mercy is no more than that he does not choose to kill Irus, for fear of his being discovered by the extraordinary display of skill and strength. In l. 94, Ἀχαιοὶ is interpreted as the suitors. So else, when, as p. 413, &c. I suppose the word is a corruption. Would ἀχαιοί, the ordinary title of the suitors, be tolerable in such a construction?—W. M.

XXII.

For if his strength was fully shown, he knew that all men's eyes
The powerful hero would detect, despite his mean disguise. 95
Irus the king's right shoulder hit; then he with smashing stroke
Returned a blow beneath the ear, and every bone was broke.

XXIII.

Burst from his mouth the gushing blood; down to the dust he dashed,
With bellowing howl, and in the fall his teeth to pieces crashed.
There lay he, kicking on the earth; meanwhile, the suitors proud,
Lifting their hands as fit to die, shouted in laughter loud. 100

XXIV.

Odysseus seized him by the foot, and dragged him through the hall,
To porch and gate, and left him laid against the boundary wall.
He placed a wand within his hand, and said, "The task is thine,
There seated with this staff, to drive away the dogs and swine; 105

XXV.

"But on the stranger and the poor never again presume
To act as lord, else, villain base, thine may be heavier doom."
So saying, o'er his back he flung his cloak, to tatters rent,
Then bound it with a twisted rope, and back to his seat he went, 110

XXVI.

Back to the threshold, while within uprose the laughter gay.
And with kind words was hailed the man who conquered in the fray.

“May Zeus and all the other gods, O stranger! grant thee still Whate’er to thee most choice may be, whatever suits thy will.

XXVII.

“Thy hand has checked the beggar bold, ne’er to return again
To Ithaca, for straight shall he be sped across the main, 115
Epirus-ward, to Echetus, terror of all mankind,”

So spoke they, and the king received the omen glad of mind. 117

XII.

The First Appearance of Helen

FROM THE ODYSSEY.—Book IV. 121-234.

As I do not purpose continuing this series beyond the present ballad, * —for surely a dozen articles of such a kind running regularly through all the numbers of a Magazine for a year is quite enough—I must not conclude without introducing the lady herself, who was the cause of all the wo, the highborn Helen, the far-famed beauty for whom fell and who has since been the theme of many a song. In my opening paper, I noticed the theory of the Chorizontes (οἱ χωρίζοντες), who maintained that the Iliad and the Odyssey were written by different persons, grounding their opinions on the varying accounts which, as they imagine, is given of the conduct of Helen in the two poems. In the Odyssey, Δ. 261, she confesses that she followed Paris of her own accord, induced by the goddess of love; while in the Iliad, β. 356 and 590, she is described as having been carried off by violence and detained in sorrow: which Nestor calls upon the Greeks to revenge, and which fills the breast of Menelaus with indignation.

“The topless towers of Ilion.”

* It will be seen that Dr. Maginn did not — could not, perhaps — adhere to this resolution.—M.

The line in these two passages of the Iliad is the same :

τίσασθαι Ἑλένης ὀρμήματά τε σοναχίς τε.

Unfortunately, however, ὀρμήματα occurs no where else in Homer, or any other Greek writer; and it is very puzzling to decide upon its meaning. It is translated in the ordinary Latin version raptum, and must have been so interpreted by the Chorizontes. In the small Scholia, too, we find it explained by ἀρπαγὴν. Eustathius gives it the sense of a voyage; but then τίσασθαι would necessarily express the punishment of Helen; “which,” as Buttmann gallantly says, “is not to be thought of for an instant.” His own opinion is, that it signifies any violent emotion of the mind; but when we recollect the peculiar sort of revenge recommended by Nestor, it is impossible not to suspect that the word refers to something more than mental.*

Explain it, however, as we will, it does not countenance the theory of the Chorizontes. We need not have recourse to the metaphysical refinement of maintaining that the fascination of Paris acting on a weak woman was, and continued to be, a kind of violence committed upon her; all we have to do is to consider whence comes the complaint about these ὀρμήματα, whatever they may be. Nestor urging the Greeks to fight in what he wished them to consider the cause of Helen, would, of course represent her as an injured, not a guilty woman; and Menelaus, her husband, anxious to get her back again, would naturally desire to believe that she left him with reluctance, and continually sighed to return. In the Iliad, Γ. 173, &c., she says that she willingly accompanied Paris, as plainly as she says it in the Odyssey. In her own speeches she appears as the victim of love; it suits her Greek friends to represent her as the victim of violence. There surely is nothing unnatural, but directly the reverse, in these different views of her case.

* My opinion, however, is, that in one of the passages the line is interpolated. Some ancient critics, with whom Heyne is inclined to agree, wished to expunge it from the speech of Nestor, Il. B. 356. I incline against the other passage. The three lines, B. 588–90, are not in the spirit of the catalogue, or in accordance with the generally unobtrusive character of Menelaus. In the speech of Nestor the line in question has a peculiar fitness.—W. M.

We find, however, not indeed a difference, but a most delicate discrimination, between the Helen of the Iliad and the Odyssey. In the former she is plunged in perpetual sorrow, mourning over her only daughter, her amiable friends, her famous brothers, whom she had deserted, and cursing herself, as the occasion of all the sorrow and misfortunes by which she is surrounded, from her first appearance to her last. In the Odyssey, we see her proud of port, magnificent in appearance, every inch a queen. Circumstances only are different—the woman is the same—the one Helen of the one Homer. Her burst of grief on seeing, from the towers of Troy, her old friends now alienated from her, and of still more poignant lamentation, on not seeing among them her renowned brothers, the first of men on the turf and in the ring, steed-taming Castor and stout-handed Pollux, is only natural. How soon is that sorrow checked, and the deep remorse she expresses for her lapse and its consequences forgotten, the moment that coming in ready obedience at his call she sees the man for whom she had abandoned every thing she had so lately lamented! how soon is her petulant speech of taunting reproach silenced, and how easily does she yield again at the first warm words of flattery and love! Is not this also natural?

When Paris is slain, she is transferred, according to the custom of those ages, to Deiphobus. The only passage in which she is introduced in company with her new husband occurs shortly after the lines which I am about to translate (Od. Δ—289); and it represents him suspicious, as he well might be, of her movements, and urging her to deeds of treachery, in which he finds her no reluctant associate. But by this time the guilty love had departed, and she desires no longer to remain in Troy.

The post-Homeric-writers—who, however, knew no more about the matter than ourselves—assign to her the part of betraying Deiphobus to death, in order to make her peace with Menelaus. It merely marks their opinion of the general treachery of her character; for we find nothing of it in Homer, who describes the house of Deiphobus as having been taken, after a desperate battle—αἰνότατον πόλεμον—by Ulysses and Menelaus. Od. Θ. 517—520.

Herbert, in conformity with the theory of his Nimrod, applies to her the character of “the accursed woman” shut up in the tower. I interpret Homer all through literally. Helen has no enchantment about her but the charms which Nature gave.*

* Anacreon, Od. 2.] I venture upon some paraphrastic mimicry of this untranslatable ode, placing it, with due appreciation of rank, in a note. I versify it in the favorite metre of Burns. If he had known a little Greek (a very little would have been necessary), and thought translation of Anacreon worthy of his genius, we might have had something Teian in our language, or, at least, in its Scotch dialect. As it is:—

ἦνύσις κέρατα ταύροις,
ὄπλας δ' ἔδωκεν ἵπποις,
ποδωκίην λαγωαῖς,
λέουσι χάσμι' ὀδόντων,

τοῖς ἰχθύσιν τὸ νηκτόν,
τοῖς ὀρνέοις πέτασθαι,
τοῖς ἀνρδράσιν φρόνημα
γυναιξίν οὐκ ἐπέιχεν τί οὖν δίδωσι; Κἄλλος.

ἀντ' ἀσπίδων ἀπασέων,
ἀντ' ἐγγέων ἀπάντων·
νικᾷ δὲ καὶ σίδηρον,
καὶ πῦρ, καλὴ τις οὐσα.

I.

Horns to the bull has Heaven decreed;
With hoof of vigor armed the steed;
Gifted the hare with foot of speed;
So toothed the jaw
Of yawning lion, as to breed
Terror and awe.

She is the beauty of Greece—the wooed of fifty princes, the flower of Hellas, plighted by solemn vows to defend her from insult and wrong, though her choice could light only on one among them. This is sufficient to excuse all her frailties, to cast all her errors into oblivion. Pope, in his own peculiar line of poetry unsurpassable, has told the story in the often-quoted line of the Rape of the Lock. Helen, like Belinda, had the failings of her sex; but men had only to “Look in her face, and you forget them all.”

True it is, that the failings of Belinda were not of so grave a kind as those of the Argive beauty—being nothing worse than flirting, ogling, “and all that;” but, on the other hand, her beauty was not of the celestial lustre of the δία γυναικῶν, before which, from early youth to mature womanhood, all who beheld her, were they old or young, favored or injured, were prostrate in admiration. In Helen’s case, any excuse will suffice. Fate—Venus—the will of the gods—any thing—is made to palliate the conduct, however deserving of the severest censure, of the woman whose countenance, even in the eyes of Trojan elders, is like to the immortal goddesses; and for whom the very fathers of the city, exposed to ruin and slaughter on

II.

To fish is given to stem the tide;
To birds, on wing through air to glide;
To men, with forethought to provide
For every duty.
Was aught for woman left beside?
O, yes! ’twas beauty!

III.

Beauty! compared with thee, the shield
Guards less the heart in battle-field;
Less sharp the spears that warriors wield,
Darted on foeman!
Hard steel, fierce flame, themselves must yield—
To charm of woman.

her account, admit, as they gaze upon her, that it is no wonder that nations should engage in all the woes of war. She was, beside, of the blood of the gods—of the highest blood, too; and ladies of heavenly birth claimed privileges not conceded to ordinary mortals, and had their claims allowed. In this war, the complaint of her Greek partisans was not that she had granted favors to Paris, but that she, the Jove-born, had been subjected to violence and rape. Had she remained quietly at home, her lapse would have been attributed to some immediate avatar of the gods; and Menelaus would have borne it with as much tranquillity as Amphitryon.

The Helen of the Iliad and the Odyssey is in the main features of character essentially one. She is selfish, sensual, and splendid. In the Iliad, the uncertainty of her lot, and the surrounding slaughter, draw from her bitter complaints and unavailing wishes that she had never been born, or had perished in the waves before she came to Troy; but her griefs are selfish. We find her first coolly employed in weaving tapestry to picture forth the battles of the armies “suffering woes” on her account: and when she learns that Paris and Menelaus are to fight in single combat to decide to whom she was to belong as wife, she feels, certainly, a slight emotion of soft remembrance of other days; but it does not make her forget the necessity of wrapping herself up in silvery sheen, and descending, with her handmaidens, in due state, to witness, as a scarcely-concerned spectator, the scenes going on in the plains. She is perfectly reconciled to the result of the conflict, whatever it may be. She thinks tenderly of her former husband—i. e. she is ready to return to him if he wins her, and to abandon her Trojan lover. She is found equally ready to fall into the arms of Paris when he comes back from the field. When she reproaches him for his defeat, her anger is embittered by the reflection of the disgrace it occasions to herself. (Il. Z. 349, &c.) As she had deserted her husband, she wishes that the man for whom the gods destined her had been one more worthy of respect, and more sensible of honorable impulses. So, when she mourns over the slain body of Hector, her sorrow flows principally from her conviction, that by his death she has lost a powerful friend, at a moment when she most wants a protector. (Il. Ω . 773, &c.) Her conduct to Paris is that of a finished coquette. She chides and upbraids him, but the next instant shares with him the pleasures of sensual love. Not only is she prepared, if the decision of the fight decrees it, to leave him for Menelaus; but she hints plainly enough (Il. Γ . 400), that if it were the will of Venus that she should go with any other favorite of the goddess in Phrygia or Mæonia, she might murmur at the arrangement, but would not think of disobeying.

In the Odyssey, we find her displaying the same external splendor, and the same indifference to the sufferings of others, provided her own feelings are gratified. We learn from herself, that she connived at the slaughter of the Trojans by the hands of Ulysses, whom she welcomed and harbored when he entered the town as a spy; and from her husband, that she was equally ready to betray Ulysses himself, and his companions in the horse, to slaughter, as merciless at the hands of Deiphobus, by luring them to their fate by a treacherous imitation of the voices of their wives. She rejoiced, she tells us, in her heart, when she heard the shrill wailing of the Trojan women; because she now—now that Paris was no more—was anxious to return home; and not a word of compassion or remorse, except in general and unmeaning phrases, drops from her concerning all the misery she occasioned. Paris is never mentioned (perhaps on the principle of Haynes Bayly's song, "Oh, no, we never mention her!"). The misfortunes of the war are freely treated, as if she were indifferent to all concerned; and if she sheds, in company with others, an idle tear over Ulysses, whose craft and deceit had chiefly attracted her admiration (Od. Δ. 257), she speedily banishes reflections that might disturb her, by the sweet oblivious antidote of nepenthe. Her selfish sorrows, in the Iliad, are replaced by a disposition for ease equally selfish. She is forgiven by her husband—the time of deep emotion has passed away—the bloody dream of war is over—the sweet intoxication of sensual passion gone. She sits as queen in the halls of her native land; and though she sometimes uses words of regret or shame, it is plain that her heart is at rest, from feeling, that all is done—that whatever memories she may retain for those who once stirred every passion, they shall not be permitted to disturb her present repose—that she is never again to witness scenes of reproach, danger, or dismay—and that where she now is none dare censure her, but, on the contrary, that all admitted to her presence approach her in profound submission to her rank and fame, or in unfeigned admiration of her peerless beauty and her excelling attractions.

She is perpetually applying to herself terms of condemnation; but from Homer, in his own person, we never heard a word of blame directed against her. It was no part of his task to compose sermons, or ethical treatises; but he gives his opinions in a way just as intelligible as if he had moralized through a whole volume. Helen, in the Iliad, is shown in contrast with Andromache; in the Odyssey, with Penelope; and many and minute are the touches of distinction between the characters of the respective ladies—between the devoted wife, praying her husband not to rush into danger, no matter how honorable might be the occasion, and the sensual mistress, driving her lover to the combat that he might not disgrace her choice—between the afflicted woman, begging, in tones of pathetic eloquence, that her Hector should not abide the issue of a single combat, pressed upon him by every consideration of public honor and private feeling, and the haughty dame, whining, indeed, with a mixture of coquetry and selfish remorse, but coolly awaiting the result of a duel, in which her husband, to whose honorable qualities she herself bears testimony, both in the Iliad and Odyssey, and the man for whom she professed a fatal affection, peril their lives solely on her account, indifferent to the fate of the combat, and prepared to welcome the embraces of either—and, again, between the cautious and prudent lady, waiting, in widowhood and seclusion, long years, in the hope of her husband's return, subjecting herself to insult and annoyance, while she reared their son to manhood, though scarcely dreaming that her hopes would be fulfilled at last, and the intrigante, reckless of every thing but immediate gratification, abandoning home, and honor, and daughter, without scruple, living a life of luxury and splendor, professing love, but feeling none of its noble or soul-stirring emotions, at once braving the world and wooing its flatteries—between Penelope, chaste, upright, free from self-reproach, and careless of the female point of honor, and Helen, proud of bearing, but tormented by her own thoughts whenever she ventures to think, sincere, perhaps, for the moment, in the utterance of remorseful emotions, but confirmed by long practice in hypocrisy and deceit. Faithless and fair, an object of admiration more than of love, of pity rather than of condemnation for her errors, trusted by none, and complimented by all, the very splendor with which she is introduced, both in the Iliad and Odyssey, affords a striking contrast to the affectionate meeting of Andromache and Hector, and the modest demeanor of Penelope, called from her chamber to check a song reminding her too sadly of her absent husband. These are the scenes in which these ladies are originally introduced in the Iliad and Odyssey.

Her striking grandeur of appearance is one of the marks which incline me to believe that Homer intended to represent

Helen as the character [not exactly of the accursed, but] of the false woman. It is a characteristic of the Cleopatras, the Olympias, the Clevelands, and other such ladies of all times and countries. It can be hardly worth while to write a dissertation on such a subject here ; but it would not be hard to prove that gorgeousness of personal appearance is at once a cause and a consequence of that disposition which led Helen to err.

But she must not be waited for any longer. Adraste, and Aleippe, and Phylo, and Asphalion, are waiting in full pomp to introduce

THE FIRST APPEARANCE OF HELEN.

TELEMACHUS, and Pisistratus, son of Nestor, arrive at Sparta in quest of information after Ulysses ; and they are there hospitably received by Menelaus and Helen. They arrive on prosperous occasion, which may be “taken in the very words of Pope :”—

“And now proud Sparta with their wheels resounds —
Sparta, whose walls a range of hills surrounds.
At the fair dome the rapid labor ends,
Where sat Atrides, 'midst his bridal friends,
With double vows invoking Hymen's power,
To bless his son's and daughter's nuptial hour.”

Hermione, the daughter of Helen and Menelaus, was wedded to the son of Achilles ; and Megapenthes, whom it pleases Pope to call the offspring of a stolen amour [ἐκ δούλης] of great Atrides' age, to the daughter of Alector, by the same authority styled his handmaid. The visitors are astonished at the magnificence which they behold. Those who read the Greek Homer, not the English, from whom he was, according to the epigram, translated, will be as much astonished at many things in the following—among the rest, at the title of “seneschal” applied to the κρείων Ἐτεωνεύς.

"The seneschal, rebuked, in haste withdrew ;
 With equal haste a menial train pursue :
 Part led the courses, from the car enlarged.
 Each to a crib with choicest grain surcharged :
 Part in a portico, profusely graced.
 With rich magnificence the chariot placed ;
 Then to the dome the friendly pair invite,
 Who eye the dazzling roofs with vast delight ;
 Resplendent as the blaze of summer noon,
 Or the pale radiance of the midnight moon.
 From room to room their eager view they bend :
 Thence to the bath, a beauteous pile, descend ;
 Where a bright damsel train attends the guests
 With liquid odors, and embroidered vests.
 Refreshed, they wait them to the bower of state
 Where circled with his peers Atrides sate :
 Throned next the king, a fair attendant brings
 The purest product of the crystal springs ;
 High on a massy vase of silver mould,
 The burnished laver flames with solid gold ;
 In solid gold the purple vintage flows,
 And on the board a second banquet rose.
 When thus the king with hospitable port : —
 ' Accept this welcome to the Spartan court ;
 The waste of nature let the feast repair,
 Then your high lineage and your names declare ;
 Say from what sceptred ancestry ye claim,
 Recorded eminent in deathless fame ?
 For vulgar parents can not stamp their race
 With signatures of such majestic grace.'

Ceasing, benevolent he straight assigns
 The royal portion of the choicest chimes
 To each accepted friend : with grateful haste
 They share the honors of the rich repast.
 Sufficed, soft whispering thus to Nestor's son,
 His head reclined, young Ithacus begun :

View'st thou unmoved, O ever-honored most
 These prodigies of art, and wondrous cost !
 Above, beneath, around, the palace shines
 The sunless treasure of exhausted mines :
 The spoils of elephants the roofs inlay,
 And studded amber darts a golden ray :
 Such, and not nobler, in the realms above
 My wonder dictates is the dome of Jove."

It is, however, one of the best executed passages in Pope ; for the splendor of the house of Menelaus is sedulously pressed upon our attention, and the stately versification of Pope does it justice. I have chosen for the following ballad a metre which, if properly managed, is capable of majestic utterance. It is the trochaic tetrameter catalectic of the ancients, if such designations be applicable to our style of verse. In our own ballads (I quote from memory, and will not guarantee my readings), that of

“Do’ you | kno’w a | Tur’kish | la’dy ||
 How’ she | lov’ed an | Eng’lish | ma’n.
 Go’ld and | je’wels | ri’ch as | ma’y be ||
 Ro’yal | clo’thing | ha’d she | o’n.”

In the classical Perrilegium Veneris :

“Cras a’ | me’t qui | nun’qu’ a- | ma’vit ||
 Qui qu’ a- | ma’vit | cra’s a- | met.
 Ve’r no- | vu’m ver | ja’m ea- | no’rum ||
 Ve’re- | na’tus | o’rbis | est.”

Or in the hymns of that musical dialect which forms the link between the classical and the romantic metres, as :—

“Ta’ntum | e’rgo | sa’era- | me’ntum ||
 Ve’ne- | re’mur | ce’rnu- | i
 E’t an- | ti’quum | do’cu- | me’ntum ||
 Ce’dat | no’vo | ri’tu- | i,” &c.

“Ma’ete | ju’dex | mo’rtu- | o’rum ||
 Ma’ete | re’x vi- | ve’nti- | um.
 So’lve | vo’cem | me’us so- | no’ram ||
 So’lve | li’nguam | mo’bi- | lem.”

The First Appearance of Helen.

I.

FROM her perfumed chamber wending, 121
Did the high-born Helen go :
Artemis she seemed descending,
Lady of the golden bow ;
Then Adrasta, bent on duty,
Placed for her the regal chair ;
Carpet for the feet of beauty
Spread Alcippe soft and fair.

II.

Phylo came the basket holding,
Present of Alcandra's hand. 125
Fashioned was its silvery moulding
In old Egypt's wealthy land ;
She, in famous Thebè living,
Was of Polybus the spouse,
He with soul of generous giving
Shared the wealth that stored his house.

III.

Ten gold talents from his coffer,
Lavers twain of silver wrought,
With two tripods at his offer,
Had he to Atrides brought ;
While his lady came bestowing
Gifts to Helen rich of price, 130
Gave a distaff, golden, glowing,
Gave this work of rare device.

IV.

Shaped was it in fashion rounded,
All of silver but the brim,
Where by skilful hand 'twas bounded,
With a golden-guarded rim.
Now to Helen Phylo bore it,
Of its well-spun labor full,
And the distaff laid she o'er it,
Wrapt in violet-tinted wool. 135

V.

Throned, then, and thus attended,
Helena the king addressed :
“ Menelaus, Jove-descended,
Know'st thou who is here thy guest ?
Shall I tell thee, as I ponder,
What I think, or false or true ; 140
Gazing now with eyes of wonder
On the stranger whom I view ?

VI.

“ Shape of male or female creature,
Like to bold Odysseus' son ;
Young Telemachus in feature,
As this youth I seen have none.
From the boy his sire departed,
And to Ilion's coast he came 145
When to valiant war ye started
All for me—a thing of shame.”

VII.

And Atrides spake, replying,
“ Lady, so I think as thou.

Such the glance from eyeball flying,
Such his hands, his feet, his brow ;
Such the locks his forehead gracing ;
And I marked how, as I told
Of Odysseus' deeds retracing,
Down his cheek the tear-drop rolled.

VIII.

“ While he wiped the current straying
With his robe of purple hue.”
Nestor's son then answered, saying —
“ What thou speakest, king, is true. 155
He who at thy board is sitting
Is of wise Odysseus sprung ;
Modest thoughts, his age befitting,
Hitherto have stilled his tongue.

IX.

“ To address thee could he venture,
While thy winning accents flowed,
In our ravished ears to enter,
As if uttered by a god !
At Gerenian Nestor's sending
Comes beneath my guidance he, 160
In the hope thy well intending
To his guest of help may be.

X.

Many a son feels sorrow try him
While his sire is far away,
And no faithful comrade by him,
In his danger prop or stay.
So, my friend, now vainly sighing,
O'er his father absent long,

Finds no hand, on which relying,
He may meet attempted wrong."

167

XI.

[Kindly Menelaus spake him,*
Praised his sire in grateful strain,
Told his whilome hope to take him
As a partner in his reign ;
All were softened at his telling
Of the days now past and gone ;
Wept Telemachus, wept Helen,
Fell the tears from Nestor's son.

XII.

Gushing came they for his brother,
Slain by Dawn-born Memnon's sword ;
But his grief he strove to smother,
As unfit for festal board.
Ceased the tears for wo and slaughter,
And again began the feast ;
Bore Asphalion round the water,
Tendered to each noble guest.]

XIII.

Then to banish gloomy thinking, 219
Helen on gay fancy bent,
In the wine her friends were drinking,
Flung a famed medicament :† 220

* I have condensed into two stanzas the substance of the lines from v. 168 to v. 218, as I fear they would seem tedious in this metre. I resume at 219.—W. M.

† Νηπειθίς τ' ἄχολόν τε, κακῶν ἐπιλήθων ἀπάντων.

WHAT the nepenthe may be has puzzled critics and physicians. It is generally supposed to be opium ; others think it the sedative extract of hyosey-

Grief-dispelling, wrath-restraining,
 Sweet oblivion of all wo;
 He the bowl thus tempered draining
 Never felt a tear to flow.

XIV.

Not if she whose bosom bore him
 Or his sire in death were laid;
 Were his brother slain before him,
 Or his son with gory blade.
 In such drugs was Helen knowing;
 Egypt had supplied her skill,
 Where these potent herbs are growing,
 Some for good, and some for ill.

230

amus, monkshood, or some such narcotic plant. Shall I hazard a conjecture, ψεύσομαι ἢ ἔτυμον ἐρέω? The mixture which Helen gives her guests is intoxicating. The derivation from νη and πίνθος, though plausible enough, as combined here with ἄχολον, is apparently an afterthought. It is, in all probability, an Oriental word adopted into Greek, and, by the Greeks, as in many other such cases, assumed as their own, and supplied, as a matter of course, with a Greek etymology. I need not go further for an example than Ἰησοῦς (Joshua) derived from ἰάομαι. As for the νη, that may be easily disposed of—either in the sense of value, or νθος—and then πενθες remains. Striking off the grammatical termination, we come to the root πενθ. This is the same word, with an aspiration, as πεντ, the root of πέντε, five. Now, πεντ, comes directly from Sanscrit; and the Sanscrit has supplied us with another word, which originally, in India five, is now the name of what jovial drainers of the bowl, who know nothing of its etymology, are in the habit of describing as our national liquor, viz. punch. A reference to no more recondite authority than Johnson's Dictionary will show the Indian origin of this word, expressive of the liquor of five ingredients. If my conjecture be allowed, the author, whoever he may have been, of "Punch cures the gout, the cholic, and the tisick," was unconsciously imitating one of the most famous passages of Homer, Od. Δ. 220, &c. I may here remark, that a familiarity with the use of drugs, as elsewhere of divination, ascribed to Helen by Homer, is another characteristic of ladies of her disposition.—W. M.

[The following farewell followed the close of the twelfth ballad as originally published in Fraser's Magazine.]

* * * I here conclude these ballads. Accident has confined the series to the *Odyssey but I must add, that I think it the older of the two Homeric poems; for which belief, in spite of Longinus, I could adduce some reasons; but I have taken up sufficient quantity of room already. And so I bid farewell to Homer, the Poet. In the words of a sincere admirer, though a feeble follower, Silius Italicus:

Meruit deus esse videri,
Et fuit in tanto non parvum pectore numen,
CARMINE COMPLEXUS TERRAM, MARE, SIDERA, MANES,
ET CANTU MUSAS, ET PRÆBUM ÆQUAVIT HONORE.

Panic. x. Lib. xiii. 786-9.

* The four Ballads which follow this statement are taken from the Iliad.—M.

XIII.

The Genealogy of Glaucus.

FROM THE ILIAD.—BOOK VI. 145-211.

ONE of the most famous episodes in the Iliad is the colloquy of Glaucus and Diomed in the sixth book, beginning with l. 119,

Γλαῦκος δ', Ἰππολόχοιο πάϊς, καὶ Τυδείας υἱός,

and ending with l. 236,

χρυσέα χαλκείων, ἑκατὸμβοι' ἐννεαβοίων.*

* Clarke, in his note on this line, observes, that Fulvius Ursinus was wrong in considering it as rhyming. “Neque enim,” he says, “κειων et βοίων similem istum sonum in diphthongis dissimilibus efficiunt.” But Fulvius iotacized, as the modern Greeks do to this day, and pronounced both diphthongs, ει and οι, as our ee. The line would now be read by a modern Greek, which certainly rhymes. Such rhymes perpetually occur in Romaic—for instance, in Soutzo's Kithara :—

“Hhrysēa hchalkēēōn, hekatōmvee' enneaveēōn,”—

ποῦ νὰ πῆς

Ἄς ἀγαπῆς;

καὶ εἰς ποῖον

καφ' ἐνεῖτον;—Ἡ πλώσκά μου, p. 24.

Whether this method of reading ancient Greek be the correct one is a different question.—W. M.

An attempt is here subjoined of rendering into ballad metre the beautiful speech of Glaucus, which abounds in poetical graces of every kind.

The episode is also one of the favorite passages selected by those who think that the Homeric poems are nothing more than centos. It is indeed certain that the 119 lines of which it consists might be struck out of the Iliad without in any way deranging the general order of the poem, Glaucus making scarcely any figure elsewhere; and the incident bearing no reference to the events immediately following or preceding. But still there are textual difficulties, which those who compare the connection between the 118th line of the sixth book with the 237th will easily perceive, though it would be too minute to enumerate them, rendering it very improbable that the passages were immediately joined. Waving, however, this, which may by some tinkering be mended, the main objection recurs, Who the poet was that wrote them, if he whom we call Homer did not? Are we to believe in the existence of twenty-four or forty-eight Homers? Nay, the coefficient may be considerably reduced. Were there two Homers? All the philology in the world will not alter the moral conviction of the impossibility of the co-existence of two poets far transcending all who followed, and supplying models and materials for all future poetry, identical in thought, in manners, in feeling, in style, in dialect, in metre, in rhythm, in every thing; while in the lapse of almost a hundred generations of articulate speaking men, who have flourished and faded since their disappearance, nothing at all approaching to such a phenomenon has occurred. We might as well believe in the fortuitous concurrence of Atoms.

In this episode we have, besides the delightful narrative style peculiar to Homer, the magnificently Homeric comparison of the generations of men to the generation of leaves, which was one of the greatest favorites of antiquity. What poet wrote that? Is he a different man from him who wrote the parting of Hector and Andromache, a couple of hundred lines further on? If he be, we have a "fortuitous concurrence," and a most marvellous one indeed. It would be just as easy to credit that the soliloquy of Hamlet, and the charging speech of Henry V. were written by two different people—indeed far more easy, as the styles of these celebrated bursts of poetry are essentially different; and that Hemynge and Condell played the part assigned to Pisistratus, by binding them together in a volume inscribed with the name of some phantom, which they called Shakespeare.

The message of Prætus has occasioned much controversy, and has been brought to bear upon this question of the individuality of Homer. What were the σήματα λυγρὰ? Were they letters, or symbols of death? What is γράφας? Is it writing, or mere marking? What was the πίναξ πτυκτος? Is the line in which it occurs authentic or spurious? The ancients, in general, entertained no doubt that the fatal message was conveyed in a letter, and "Bellerophon's letters" passed into a proverb among them. In more critical times, the other opinion prevailed, and I think justly. There is no trace of the existence of the art of writing in the Homeric poems, which among other reasons is a fit cause for ascribing the Batrachomyomachia to another author than the poet of the Iliad and Odyssey; because in that pleasant little burlesque, writing is distinctly referred to. Hence we are asked to believe that Homer and the men of his times could not write, and that therefore we are indebted to tradition for his poems. As works of such length could hardly be composed without writing, and certainly not remembered by any individual as a whole, it is argued that they were originally nothing but a set of detached ballads produced by different people; and after having been for a long period of time sung in the East, much to the delight of their hearers, they were gathered into a collection by Lycurgus, and afterward exhibited in the ordered form in which they have come down to us by Pisistratus. But it is forgotten that Homer flourished three generations after the Trojan war, and the art of writing might have been introduced into Greece from the East in that very century. It does not follow that because Ajax could not write, Homer could not. Homer was depicting to his contemporaries the manners of their grandfathers, or great-grandfathers, and the deeds, of which the fame only had reached his ears, and which he hastened to immortalize. Many things indicate that changes had taken place. His heroes are driven about in chariots, and never ride—if they could, they would, of course, have abandoned the clumsier method of fight; but, in Homer's time, the art was known, for he describes in a simile a very difficult and active feat of horsemanship. They resort perpetually to the primitive practice of throwing stones at one another; from Homer's complaints of the degeneracy of the men of his day in not being able to lift such ponderous missiles as Ajax and others fling about with ease, we may conclude that the practice had been abandoned. Other indications of the same kind are easily found. If this conjecture be right, it will add another proof that great discoveries at their commencement act as stimulants to genius. If the invention of writing be graced by the appearance of Homer, the invention of printing more than two thousand years after called into existence within a century a greater quantity of human power and intellect than ever was recorded to have existed together in the history of man.

In the case of Proetus, Homer is narrating what occurred two generations before the birth of Glaucus, in the youth of his grandfather, in a still darker age, of which Nestor is the sole survivor—the age when there were Centaurs in the mountains to be utterly destroyed by a race of demigods, man-fighting

Amazons, and Chimæras breathing fire. In these days we may reasonably doubt a knowledge of the art of writing, and admit that the σήματα λυγρὰ were no more than symbols; something, perhaps, like the picture-writing of the Mexicans [a magnificent monument of which, let me remark in passing, is to be found in the splendid folios of the late Lord Kingsborough, who, after spending larger sums of money on a literary work than ever was before expended by any nobleman—in fact £32,000—a work, too, which confers honor on the country, died, much to the credit of the laws of the land, a prisoner for debt in the Marshalsea jail of Dublin*]; but it by no means follows that, in a couple of hundred years after the art had not been acquired. Sir William of Deloraine honestly confesses that he knew neither letter nor line; we can hardly argue from that candid confession that his brother-knight and clansman, Sir Walter Scott, was in the same happy state of ignorance, and that we are indebted to the recitations of various bards unknown, whose unwritten and unconnected ballads respecting certain border feuds were gathered by the Pisistratic Ballantyne, for the Lay of the Last Minstrel! One supposition is just as reasonable as the other, and yet this is the cheval de bataille of

* There is a copy of this magnificent work in the Astor Library, New York. Indeed, several copies have reached this country, where they have been sold for as many dollars as they went for pounds in England. Viscount Kingsborough, born in 1795, was eldest son of the Earl of Kingston, an Irish peer. He was member of Parliament, for the county of Cork, from 1820 to 1826. Quitting public life, in which he made no figure, he devoted himself to study, and published his great work on Mexican antiquities in 1831. Four copies were printed on vellum:—of these, the author presented one to the British Museum, in London, and another to the Bodleian Library, Oxford. The fate of Lord Kingsborough was precisely that indicated by Dr. Maginn. His father had become much involved—Lord Kingsborough became security for some of the debts, which his father promised should be paid at an appointed time—this promise was broken and Lord Kingston got out of the way—the creditors issued execution against Lord Kingsborough, and put him into the Sheriff's prison [the Marshalsea] in Dublin—there he caught a typhus fever, of which he died in February, 1837, aged 42.—M.

Wolf and his adherents. I am of opinion that the Iliad and Odyssey are cœval with the art of writing, or rather of its introduction into Europe, and a more glorious introduction it could not have found.

IN a pause during the battle, Glaucus and Diomed meet. The latter, who has been lately engaged with the gods in combat, does not wish to continue in such dangerous contests, and inquires whether his antagonist is of earth or heaven. “ ‘I will not fight,’ he says, ‘with the blissful gods; but if you are of the mortals who eat the fruit of the earth, approach that you may the sooner arrive at the borders of death.’ And the gallant son of Hippolochus addressed him in reply.”

The Genealogy of Glaucus.

I.

WHY do you ask, bold Tydeus' son, 145
Why do you ask, what race am I?
As forest-leaves have come and gone,
So does the race of mankind hie :
The wind outblows, and straightway strows
The scattered leaves upon the ground ;
But soon the wood blooms green in bud,
When again the spring-tide hours come round.

II.

Such, and no more, the race of man ;
One flowers, and another fades apace.
But if you truly wish to scan 150
How runs the lineage of our race,
What many know I straight will show :
Within a nook of Argos land,
The land which breeds such gallant steeds,
Doth Ephrya's ancient* city stand.

III.

And there dwelt Sisypheus, the son
Of Æolus, the tempest lord

* I have ventured to insert the epithet ancient, as Ephrya was the old name of Corinth. Some notion of its antiquity must have taken possession of the mind of Clarke; for he quotes Virgil's "Urbs antiqua fuit" as a parallel passage.—W. M.

And through all the earth a wilier one
 Could not the sons of men afford.
 To Glaucus his heir, did his lady bear
 The gallant youth, Bellerophon, 155
 To whom high Heaven had fine form given,
 And strength in kindly valor shown.

IV.

But Prætus, in his evil soul,
 Felt toward him foul and felon thought
 (And under King Prætus' stern control Had Jove the men of Argos brought),
 His queenly dame of lofty name
 Had felt sharp passion's fiercest sting,
 And to his breast, with love unblest,
 Desired in stolen joy to cling. 161

V.

But wise, and all averse to wrong,
 He would not with her wish comply.
 Then spoke she with a traitorous tongue
 Her husband in a ready lie :
 "Do slaughter on Bellerophón,
 Or let thyself, O Prætus ! die,
 Because he strove with shameless love
 Within my arms by force to lie." 165

VI.

She spoke : and when the king had heard,
 All through his soul fierce anger flew ;
 To slay his youthful guest he feared.
 Much scrupling such a deed to do,

By his command to Lycian land
 The unsuspecting youth was sent.
 But many a mark of import dark
 He bore off with him as he went.

VII.

In tablets of the closest fold,
 Prætus' life-killing mandates lay —
 There was his lady's father told
 Bellerophón at once to slay.
 But heavenly led to Lycia sped,
 My favored grandsire on his way ; 171
 And when he came to Xanthus' stream,*
 Much honor did its monarch pay.

VIII.

Nine days they held the constant feast,
 Nine oxen for the board they slew ;
 When on the tenth day in the East,
 Blushed forth the dawn of rosy hue, 175
 The king addressed his honored guest,
 And spoke his wish that should be shown
 With what intent there had been sent To Lycian land Bellerophón.

* Came—stream.] Let any body who objects to this as an Irish rhyme, look over those of so modern and exact a rhymist as Pope. He rhymes sea with way ; tea with obey, &c. Strame, as the Irish in general still pronounce it, was unquestionably the original pronunciation, and words of that spelling were always so rhymed in our poets until very recent times. It would be hard to say when London fashion iotacized the diphthongal form ea into ee. We still keep it in its primitive state in our primitive viand, beefsteak, leaving it to the French to mince it into biftsik.—W. M.

IX.

Now when the message met his eye —
 And Prætus' felt intent he knew —
 He sent him, and one doomed to die,
 The dire Chimæra to subdue.
 From heavenly seed, not human breed,
 That yet unconquered monster came. 180
 Dreadful, I ween, her throat was seen
 Fierce breathing forth the fiery flame.

X.

In head a lion, in the tail
 A dragon, and a goat in loin;
 Yet did his valor there prevail,
 Upheld by portents all divine.
 And next his glaive the Solymi brave
 Did with their blood in battle wet:
 Oft did he say such desperate fray
 As theirs in fight he never met. 185

XI.

Thirdly, he smote with mortal scar
 The Amazons who warred on man;
 And back returning from that war
 'Gainst him a plot the Lycians plan.
 Through Lycia wide, the flower and pride
 Of all her warriors have they ta'en,
 And with them laid an ambuscade;
 But not a man returned again.

XII.

'They perished by his hand subdued;
 And then, as Lycia's king knew well 190

That he was born of godlike blood,
He kept him in the land to dwell.
His daughter as bride he gave, and, beside,
Shared with him half his reign;
And of land which there is most rich and rare
Was chosen as his domain.

XIII.

Fit land the clustering vine to raise,
Fit land to ply the spade;
But even on him in latter days
The wrath of Heaven was laid.
And all alone he wandered on
The Aleian plain apart;
From human path, in wo or wrath,
Devouring his own heart.

XIV.

Two sons, one daughter, to his love
Were by his lady given;
Laodamia, lofty Jove,
Whose guidance rules o'er Heaven,
Clasped in his arms, and of her charms
Is brave Sarpedon sprung;
But Artemis' bow soon laid her low,
By fiery anger stung.

200

XV.

Isander against the Solymi
In glorious battle stood;
And Ares doomed him there to die,
The sateless god of blood.

The second son as sire I own,
Hippolochus he hight ;
And from Lycia far, to the field of war,
Hath he sent me here to fight.

XVI.

And much was the counsel my father gave
At Troy to bear me well :
Ever to show myself bold and brave,
And all others to excel ;
And not to disgrace the ancient race,
Which still mid the best did shine
Or in Lycia wide, or by Ephyra-side.
Such, Diomede, is my line.

XIV.

The Arming of Achilles.

FROM THE ILIAD.—BOOK XIX. 357 to the end.

THE passage of which the subjoined is a version has always been admired as one of the most ornate and elaborate examples of the figure to which the Latin rhetoricians give the name of Expectatio. Homer employs it on many occasions, on which a long note, by Clark, on Iliad, v. 4, may be consulted. Here the beloved friend of Achilles is slain, in the 822d line of the sixteenth book of the Iliad, and yet we do not find the avenger of blood actually engaged in the fight until the 160th line of the twentieth, being some 2000 lines apart, or about the seventh part of the whole poem. A dismal and remorseless fight takes place over the body before the intelligence is conveyed to Achilles; the instant, however, that the sad tidings are communicated, he is not to delay another moment. His mother succeeds in persuading him that it is impossible he should appear in fight without armor, and that procures a delay. Unarmed, however, he does come forth, and his well-known war-cry is of itself sufficient to scare the victorious Trojans from the field. This, as Clarke observes, is no more than the “Achillis ad pugnam redituri fama atque expectatio.” The night is occupied in the deliberations of Hector and the forgery of the celestial arms. The reconciliation with Agamemnon must next be effected; but, at last, all preparations are over. “The hour has come, and here is the man;” he has come forth determined to do or die.

The Arming of Achilles.

I.

A S snow-flakes are driven through the wintry heaven, 357
When Boreas fiercely blows,
So thick and so fast, helms beaming bright,
And bossy shields, and corslets tight, 360
And ash-spears ready for the fight,
Out from the ships arose.

II.

And their brilliant beam, in dazzling stream,*
Skyward ascending soared,

* Several passages are quoted by the commentators as imitations of this famous passage : as from Lucretius :—

“Fulgur ibi ad cœlum se tollit ; totaque circum
Ære renidescit tellus.”—Lib. ii. 327.

Or Virgil :—

“Ac late fluctuat omnis
Ære renidenti tellus.”—Geor. ii. 281.

But where is γίλασσε, poetically paraphrased by Porphyry λαμπρυνθεῖσα φαίδρα γίγονεν—gladdened by the gleam? The shining of the armor made a great impression on the poets and balladists of the middle ages ; and their last representative, Froissart, never loses an opportunity of introducing it into his war-like pictures. “It is probable,” says Pope, “the reader may think the words shining, splendid, and others, derived from the lustre of arms, too frequent in these books. My author is to answer for it ; but it may be alleged in his excuse, that when it was the custom for every soldier to serve in armor, and when those arms were of brass, before the use of iron became common, these images of lustre were less avoidably and more necessarily present in descriptions of this nature.” I do not think any excuse needed. Gunpowder has besmirched all these glories ; but even in these days of villainous saltpetre, who has not felt that the very ground looks gladdened when the sun favors a holiday review of our own red-coats ?

And the shine which their armor shed around
 Lit with a laugh the kindling ground,
 While their trampling feet raised a thunder sound,
 As they closed about their lord.

III.

His teeth he gnashed, and his eyeballs flashed
 Like the flame of a burning brand; 365
 His soul with grief and rage was fraught;
 And wrapping his heart in vengeful thought,
 He harnessed himself in the armor wrought
 And given by Hephæstos' hand.

IV.

First, with the grasp of silver clasp,
 His greaves did he buckle on; 370
 Then he armed his breast with a bright cuirass,
 Flung round his shoulders his sword of brass,
 Uplifted his shield, a ponderous mass,
 Like the moon from afar it shone.*

Lucretius has, I think, been more happy in imitation of the ὅτ' αὖ ἐν ἀνέμοις ὀνυχέσσιν ἀνέρδον.

"Subterque virum vi

Exeitur pedibus sonitus."—Lib. ii. 328.

The opening simile of this passage—the comparison of the pouring forth of armed men, flights of arrows, &c. &c., to the driving of snow-flakes in a storm—has also ever been a favorite. Sir Walter Scott repeats it several times in prose and verse. He uses the contrary picture of the snow dissolving as a comparison for an army breaking up, with much poetical effect, in his Marmion:—

"They faded from the field as snow

Dissolves in silent dew."—W. M.

* Milton's comparison of Satan's shield to the moon will immediately occur to the English reader:

"His shield

Hung on his shoulders like the moon, whose orb
 Through optic glass the Tuscan artist views

V.

As when sailors, who keep on the storm-vexed deep - 375
 Their way with unwilling oar,
 The blaze of a distant fire espy
 From some lonely fold in the mountains high,
 When forced by the blast their course they ply,
 Driven away from their native shore ;

VI.

So to heaven shot the light from the buckler bright
 That guarded Achilles' breast.
 Next lifted he up to sheath his head 380
 His helmet of strength fit for combat dread,
 Around like a star was its lustre shed
 Beneath the horse-hair crest.

VII.

And the golden thread so thickly spread
 By Hephæstos the cone around,
 Waved in the air, as the chief essayed
 If close to his shape were the armor laid,

At evening from the top of Fesolé,
 Or in Valdarno, to desery new lands,
 Rivers, or mountains, in her spotty globe."

Voltaire, and all the school of goût, laugh at these long-tailed similes, in which the conclusion has nothing to do with the original which called up the comparison. Thus the optic glass, the Tuscan artist, Fesolé, Valdarno, &c., have nothing to do with the shield of Satan, which is compared to the moon simply from its size, rotundity, and brightness. Homer, of course, is included in this censure ; but in the tail of his similes we can always find something applicable. Here, when the glitter of the shield of Achilles is compared to that flame seen on some distant hill by mariners sailing by, the comparison is strictly over ; but the toil, the storm, the detention from their native land, suggests that feelings pervade the bosoms of the Myrmidons at the sight of the dazzling shield similar to those of the sailors on looking at the distant beacon.—W. M.

If his shapely limbs in free motion played,
 Within its harness bound.

385

VIII.

With the lightsome spring of a bird's fleet wing
 Buoyant they bore him on;
 And next from the spear-case he went to take
 His father's spear, huge, massy, of make
 Which no other hand in the host could shake
 Save his good right hand alone.

IX.

[An ash-tree spear for his father dear
 Hewed down by Chiron's stroke
 From Pelion's summits where waves the wood,
 He sent it to drip in warriors' blood.]
 Meanwhile the squires by the horses stood
 As they set them beneath the yoke.

390

X.

They fasten the trace, and they firmly place
 In the bending jaws the bit;
 Back to the car the reins are thrown,
 And seizing the whip to his hand well known,
 Sprung to his seat Automedōn,*
 Where long he had loved to sit.

395

XI.

And behind that seat in arms complete,
 Stood Achilles girt for war;

* Here the pronunciation of Automedon is neither Greek nor Romaic; but no less a dealer in rhyme than Gray will guarantee for it in English:—

“Next in the labors of the chase came on
 To try the chance the bold Hippomerōn.”—W. M.

He glowed like the sun in his noon-day gyre,
 And his chiding voice sounded fierce and dire,
 As thus to the chargers of his sire
 He shouted from the car.

XII.

“ My bright bay horse*—my fleet of course,
 Podargé's far-famed brood,— 400
 Yours be it your master back to bear
 From the battle-field now with surer care,
 Leave me not as you left Patroclus there,
 All weltering in his blood.”

* Xanthus is a bay horse. Balius, if, as the punning etymologists decide, is derived from βαλλω, may be fairly supposed to be a dashing horse. I could not rhyme them by their Greek, and took, accordingly, the best rhymes with which the gods provided me.

The objections to this incident of the speech of the horse Xanthus are numerous. Aristarchus rejected the passage altogether: it was always an object of derision for the small wits, from Lucian downward. There are many grammatical difficulties in several of the lines, and the two last appear to be not merely not Homeric, but not Greek. I do not know how such a construction as θεῶν τε καὶ ἀνέρι ἵμι διαρῆναι is to be justified; nor am I more satisfied with the connection of ἀλλὰ σοὶ ἀντὶς in the line before; but no great skill in the tinkering trade of verbal criticism could, I think without much difficulty, mend these blots. But the main difficulty in my mind is, what was suggested by the very oldest critics, why Juno should daunt her favorite warrior on this most important of occasions by so ominous a prediction. I cut the knot by imagining that Ἄτρη, not Ἥρα, was the noxious goddess boding of ill. In the preceding book Agamemnon lays all the blame of his quarrel with Achilles. If this supposition be admitted, it will give a reason why her friends the Furies stopped the voice of the horse. As for the θεὸν λευκώλενος, that is easily accounted for. If Ἥρα had once, no matter how intrusively, made her appearance in the text, her recognised epithets would immediately follow, as a matter of course, in place of

Ἀντίθετα δ' ἔλεσ' Ἄτρη, ἢ πάντας αἰῶναι,

as in τ. 91. There are some minor critical difficulties with which I should be sorry to trouble the reader of these hasty trifles, but I have always considered the boding of the horse as the last of the omens, preceding the death-doomed career of his master, and, therefore, not the least of the poetic beauties of the Iliad.—W. M.

XIII.

Then out upspoke from beneath the yoke
His dapple-foot steed of bay,
Low stooped his head, and the yoke around
His mane encircling swept over the ground, 405
For Heré had given him vocal sound
Achilles' fate to say.

XIV.

"Once yet again from the battle-plain,
Safe back we bear thee home.
But thy hour of death is hastening nigh,
All blameless are we, yet thou must die,
Slain by the hand of a godhead high,
Such is Fate's relentless doom. 410

XV.

"By no lack of speed, no sloth of steed,
Patroclus' arms were lost;
It was he, most glorious god of light,
The son of fair Leto, of tresses bright,
Who slew him amid the foremost fight,
And gave Hector the fame to boast.

XVI.

"By our flight as fast as Zephyrus' blast 415
Was thy chariot whirled along,
Yet here it is fated thy bones be laid,
By a god's strong power and a mortal's blade!"
Mute was the horse when these words were said,
For the Furies chained his tongue.

XVII.

Then with angry word the swift-foot lord,

Thus spoke his prophetic horse :—

“Why, Xanthus, in boding tone,

Hast thou my coming death fore-shown?

420

Needless to tell what so well is known,

That here I lay my corse.

XVIII.

“It is fixed by Fate that I end my date

From my father's land afar :

But still, ere my day of life runs out,

No war shall the Trojans lack or rout.”

So said he ; and, with a thundering shout,

Drove his steeds to the thickest war.

425

XV.

The Genealogy of Æneas.

FROM THE ILIAD.—Book III. 200-259.

THIS genealogy is one of the longest in the Iliad, reaching, if we include Jupiter, through eight generations, to which we may add two or three more promised to come:—

Then come the nati natorum, et qui nascentur ab illis, which indicates, at least, three generations more. In the Latin stories, the line of Æneas, I need hardly say, is carried through Ascanius to the Alban fathers and the founders of Rome. Of these stories Homer, of course, knew nothing, and the corresponding line of the Iliad to that above quoted from Virgil, viz. :—

καὶ παῖδες παίδων, τοὶ κεν μετόπισθε γένωνται.—Υ. 308.

points to no more than two generations of Descendants of Æneas, who ruled not in Italy, but in Troy, after the extinction of the line of Priam, as we find Neptune prophesying :—

δῶρα μὴ ἄσπερμος γενεὴ καὶ ἄφαντος ὀληται
Δαρδάνου, δὲν Κρονίδης περὶ πάντων φίλατο παίδων, οἳ ἔθεν ἐξεγένοντο γυναῖκων τε θνητάων.
ἦ δὲ γὰρ Προιάμου γενεὴν ἤχθηρε Κρονίων, κ. τ. λ.—Υ. 303-306.

“Fate wills not this, nor thus can Jove resign
The Future Father of the Dardan line;
The first great ancestor obtained his grace
And still his love descends on all his race.
For Priam now, and Priam’s faithless kind,
At length are odious to the all-seeing mind;
On great Æneas shall devolve the reign,
And sons succeeding sons the lasting line sustain.”

Where our English Homer, Pope, has been a little oblivious; for if the love of Jupiter descended on all the line of Dardanus, it is somewhat strange to find in the next verse that the existing head of that line, Priam, with all his family, were “odious to the all-seeing mind.” Sed perinde est, as Clarke is in the habit of saying.

Making the usual allowances for reigns and generations, this puts the foundation of Dardania some couple of hundred years before the Trojan war, which sufficiently corresponds with the ordinary chronologies deduced from the Arundelian marbles and other sources. In these the foundation of Troy is set down as having occurred in 1480, and its destruction in 1184 B. C. Dardanus is, I suppose, derived from Dar, der, dwr, drw, δρυς, &c., an oak, and Dan, a down. He was a Celt evidently, and the words composing his name after having long served the Druids in their mystic groves, as the refrain of a hymn to the oak, "Dān, dān, dān, dāra dān," still survive most flourishingly among us as a chorus to many a hymn of a different kind in the form of "Down, down, down, derry down," "which nobody can deny," and perhaps supply the aboriginal tune to "Oh! the roast beef of Old England, and oh! the English roast beef." I find the chorus in its primitive form used so lately as by Sir George Etherege—Pope's Etherege the polite—in his "She wou'd, if she cou'd," where they are sung in his cups by Sir Oliver Cockwood, "Dan, dan, dara, dan." But this is wandering far away, indeed, from the genealogy of the son of Venus. The genealogy shows, too, that Homer, in all probability, lived not much more than sixty or seventy years from the Trojan war, which agrees with many other circumstances. I may here remark, that much critical use might be made of the Homeric genealogies, particularly of Nestor's, to show the extreme improbability that the poems attributed to him could have been written by more persons than one; but I shall speedily find an opportunity of doing so more at length, and so close this wandering preface, which has already rambled from "Dardanus" to "Derrydown."

ÆNEAS, determined to check the slaughterous career of Achilles, comes forth to meet him. Achilles rushes at once to the encounter. And what the seed of Venus spoke to Thetis' son, is here thus attempted in ballad metre.

The Genealogy of Aeneas.

I.

IDLE the thoughts, my soul to daunt, 200
Like a weak boy's with angry tongue;
I could return, with scoffing taunt,
Words of reviling, wrath, and wrong.
I know thy line, and thou knowest mine,
What need it that the tale be told?
Spreads over the earth our lofty birth
In legends of days of old.

II.

The face of my parents thou ne'er hast viewed. 205
To my eyes thine were never shown,
But that thou art of King Peleus' blood
To all mankind is known;
And of Thetis the fair, with flowing hair,
Who dwells 'neath the ocean wave.
To Anchises' arms, me, the Queen of Charms,
Pledge of love, Aphrodite gave.

III.

One pair to-day for offspring slain
In loud lament must weep; 210
No longer shall this childish strain
Our spears from the conflict keep.

But if I must tell, what to most men well
 Is known, my lineage proud,
 In days long since gone, was Dardanus, son
 Of Zeus, who compels the cloud.

IV.

And he built Dardania, for not as yet 215
 On the plain sacred Ilion stood ;
 But their dwellings at foot of Ida they set
 With many a fountain dewed.
 Next the heir of his race filled his lordly place,
 Erichthonius, richest of men,
 For of thousands three brood-mares had he,
 Feeding upon the fen. 220

V.

Loose in the marsh were they turned to feed ;
 And, as Boreas whirled along,
 He was seized with desire, while in flowery mead
 They frolicked amid their young.
 With passion warm, in a dark steed's form,
 He veiled his godlike mould ; 225
 And from his embrace, a wondrous race
 Of twelve she-colts was foaled.

VI.

Over waving corn was their fleet career,
 On its topmost beard it were sped ;
 So rapid and light their touch, no ear
 Would bend beneath their tread.*

* Pope's version : —

“ These lightly skimming, when they swept the plain,
 Nor plied the grass, nor bent the tender grain,” &c.,

If their bounding track coursed over the back
 Of ocean spreading wide ;
 On the unscattered spray of the waters gray,
 They skimmed along the tide. 230

VII.

And from 'Tros, his son, who the Troës swayed
 After his sire as king,
 Did Ilus, Assaracus, Ganymede,
 Three gallant princes, spring.
 And in grace the last all men surpassed,
 So far that the admiring gods
 To Heaven caught him up to bear Jove's cup,*
 And dwell in their blest abodes. 236

is not so happy as his own original couplet in the Essay on Criticism : —

“Not so when swift Camilla scours the plain, Flies o'er the unbending corn, and skins along the main ;”

which is as good a mimicry of rapidity in verse as is, perhaps, in the power of our monosyllabic language to afford.—W. M.

* On this Cicero remarks in the First Book of his Tusculan Questions, “Nec Homerum audio, qui Ganymedem a diis raptum ait propter formam ut Jovi ministraret. * * * Fingebat hæc Homerus, et humana ad Deos transferebat ; divina mallem ad nos.” This bit of epigram has as usual been looked upon as something very fine ; but in reference with that to which Cicero alludes, nothing can be more absurd or unjust than the charge against old Homer. Compare the Homeric heroes as they appear in the original, with the same characters as they are found in the later authors. Bayle or his contributors have saved all the trouble of making minute examination to those who wish to be acquainted with those things, “que haud profeit scire.” It is horrid to be obliged to stain my page with the allusion. I certainly shall not go further in reference, nor “claram facim præferre pudendis.” But I must protest that it is Cicero who is the blackguard. Alas ! that any one, no matter how shabbily connected with literature should have the right of applying such an epithet to the “divinely inspired breast of Tully,” and not the greater name of Homer. Xenophon talks mere nonsense on the subject. The catching up of Ganymede in the Homeric story means no more than that he suddenly disappeared. I am obliged for the sake of rhyme to make Tithonus “bridegroom of the Morn ;” but I have ample authority in Homer (and I look upon authority elsewhere on any thing in which his times are concerned as mere nonsense), for the soft impeachment.—W. M.

VIII.

To the son of Ilus Laomedon
 Were the bridegroom of the Morn,
 Tithonus, and Priam, who fills the throne,
 Lampus and Clytius born ;
 And as sturdy a branch, Hicetaon stanch,
 As Ares ever had grown.
 Through Assaracus we join this princely tree,
 My grandsire was his son.

IX.

Capys, Anchises' sire ; he mine. 240
 Such is my lineage high.
 As Hector is head of Priam's line,
 So of my father's, I.
 But deem not that worth will follow birth,
 They come not at mortal call ;
 But in varying degrees, as Zeus may please,
 They are given by the Lord of all.

X.

But let us no more, like silly boys,
 Wrangle here in idle strain, 245
 While all around the fight's fierce noise
 Is sounding over the plain.
 For both and each of slanderous speech
 Might choose a ponderous load ;
 Far more in weight, than a galley's freight,
 By five-score rowers rowed.

XI.

The tongue is a weapon nimble to wield,
 For which ample task is found,

And of words is a wide and open field,
All spreading round and round. 250
Whatever is said, soon back is sped,
So why should we jarring here,
Like women in rage, contentious wage
This poor and wordy war?

XII.

Women hurrying on to the public path,
Careless of false or true,
At each other rail, as swelling wrath
Inspires each scolding shrew. 255
By your right arm strong—not your angry tongue—
Must I from the field be chased;
No longer I stay, without more delay
Let our spears of the battle taste.

XVI.

Nestor's First Essay in Arms.

WITH AN INTRODUCTION AND NOTES BY THE TEMPLAR.*

FROM THE ILIAD.—BOOK XI. 670-761.

THIS ballad was finished in the golden sunlight of a summer's eve. On the following Sabbath, about the same hour that I had penned the concluding stanzas from the dictation of the author,

* This introduction was written by Edward Kenealy, who at this time contributed a great many papers to Fraser's Magazine, under the signature of "A Templar." Of Dr. Maginn there was no friend more true, no admirer so sincere. Their acquaintance commenced only two years before Dr. Maginn's death, and speedily ripened into warm regard. When Maginn was on his death-bed, at Walton-on-Thames, (one of the most charming of the many beautiful ruralities in the vicinity of London) almost the only person whom he sent for was Mr. Kenealy, who, seeing him without money—a want which his own limited means at the time prevented him from adequately supplying—addressed a manly and earnest letter to Sir Robert Peel, who was then Prime Minister, in which he represented his friend's distressed condition—an appeal immediately responded to by a generous grant of money. It arrived three days before Maginn's death, but, from some reason or other, this noble act of thoughtful liberality was never communicated to Maginn, who died in ignorance of it.—Maginn's death took place on Saturday, August 21, 1842. The last of the Homeric Ballads was taken down, from dictation on the Sunday immediately preceding Maginn's death, by Mr. Kenealy, as related in the Introduction.—Faithful in his friendship, Kenealy followed Maginn's remains to the grave, and did justice to his memory—to his large learning—his excellent heart—his expansive genius—in a Memoir of considerable length, which appeared in the Dublin University Magazine for January, 1844—as yet the fullest account of this very remarkable man.—M

I beheld him cold, and dead, and coffined, awaiting the last sad ceremony of interment. The lips that but a short week before had flashed forth choice and beautiful wit were closed and colorless; the spirit that shone within his eyes had vanished away, and, let us hope, had winged its flight to some sphere of peace. All that was mortal of William Maginn lay before me—my eyes filled with tears. And I thought within myself whither had sped that grand eccentric genius whose learning had been the luminary of his age, and whose wit had charmed thousands. All was silent! The only sound was the sighing of the cold and melancholy wind as it swept amid the branches of the trees that surrounded the cottage, and passed onward, moaning as it went.

On the Sunday before he died, Maginn had been remarkably cheerful, eloquent and witty. These qualities, indeed, he possessed to the last; but I had often seen him in health when he was not so brilliant as now in his setting, and within a brief space of the twilight of death. During the day he had related innumerable stories of all the great writers with whom he had lived in intimacy; had talked about books and men with that mingled vein of humor and philosophy which was the great ornament of his conversation; and had amused himself in detailing one of those literary projects in which his mind was always running, but which, alas! were never fated to be fulfilled. Death had not at any time entered into his discourse; apparently he sought to keep it altogether out of his thoughts. Though so weak as to require to be lifted in my arms across the room, he seemed to think dissolution by no means near; or, if he knew that he was dying, he certainly bore it with a philosophy that would have immortalized his name in the days of Socrates or Cato. About four o'clock I left him for an hour or two, when he slept, and returned to him in the evening. He was then up, propped by pillows in an arm-chair, and as gay and intelligent as if he had never been ill. After we had talked a short while, "K——," said he, "shall I take some work out of you?" I, of course, assented; and having got some paper and ink, I sat down opposite to him. He then took Homer in his hand; and, after a brief interval of thought, dictated the latter part of the following ballad, evidently with no mental labor, but with an ease that could have resulted only from his intimacy with the Greek, and his extraordinary power of versification. When he had finished I read for him the entire translation, and marked out the Greek for the printer. He desired me to correct the proofs. I have done so, but I scarcely anticipated when we sat together that it was to be the last of his compositions.—E. K.

THE present, although not the most finished of the "Homeric Ballads," does not, I think, deserve the severity with which critics have spoken of it. It appears to me to be introduced with great poetic skill, and agreeably summons away the reader from one of those dull bulletins of killed and wounded with which Homer occasionally disfigures his poem, and which Horace, perhaps, alluded to when he wrote his aliquando bonus dormitat Homerus. Mr. Pope, of all the translators of "the old man eloquent," has treated it with the greatest indignity; and, albeit his version of it is in some parts elegant and faithful, it is, on the whole, a hurried composition, not written con amore, but with a manifest eagerness to get through it, and that without doing full justice to the beauties of the original. Pope's version, indeed, displays a singular instance of compression; the paraphrastic style in which he most usually indulged he has altogether avoided. I have not space enough to inquire into the justice of his condemnation, but I can, at least, afford to my readers a glimpse of the controversy.

The introduction is poetical. Nestor and Idomeneus bravely fighting in the van of the Achaians, the attention of the former is directed by his companion to the condition of Machaon, who has been badly wounded by Paris, and is in danger of being killed. Nestor quits the throng of the encounter and conveys the physician in his chariot to the tents. As they are proceeding, Achilles sees them from a distance and sends Patroclus to inquire the name of the wounded warrior. Patroclus obeys, and hurries after the chariot:—

Οἳ δ' ὅτε δὴ κλισίην Νηληϊάδεω ἄφικοντο,
 Ἀύτοὶ μὲν β' ἀπέβησαν ἐπὶ χθόνα πουλυβότειραν·
 Ἐξ ὀχέων· τοὶ δ' ἰδρῶ ἀπεψύχοντο χιτώνων,
 Στάντε ποτὶ προῖην παρὰ θῖν' ἄλος· αὐτὰρ ἔπειτα
 Ἔς κλισίην ἐλθόντες ἐπὶ κλισμοῖσι κάθισον.—A. 517-621.

"The chief descending from their car he found;
 The panting steeds EURYMEDON unbound.
 The warriors standing on the breezy shore
 To dry their sweat and wash away their gore,
 Here paused a moment, while the gentle gale
 Conveyed that freshness the cool seas exhale;
 Then, to consult on further methods, went
 And took their seats beneath the shady tent."—POPE.

Here Hecamede, "Arsinous' daughter graced with golden hairs," prepares a repast for them in due form. The description is picturesque:—

Ἦ σφοῖν πρῶτον μὲν ἐπιπροΐηλε πρόαπεζον
 Καλὴν, κυανόπεζαν, ἐύζουον· αὐτὰρ ἐπ' αὐτῆς
 Χαλκεῖον κάμειον· ἐπὶ δὲ κρόθονον, ποτῶ ὄψον,
 Ἦ δὲ μέλι χλωρόν, παρὰ δ' ἀλφίτρην ἰερὸν ἄκτῃν·
 Πᾶρ δὲ δέπας περικαλλῆς, ὃ οἴκοθεν ἦγ' ὁ γεραίδης,
 Χρυσείοις ἥλοισι πεπαρμένον· οὐατα δ' αὐτοῦ
 Τεσσαρ' ἔσαν, εἰαὶ δὲ πελειάδες ἀμφὶς ἕκαστον
 Χρύσειαι νεμέθοντο· δόω δ' ὑπὸ πυθμένες ἦσαν.
 Ἄλλος μὲν μολέων ἀποκινήσασκε τραπέζης,
 Πλεῖον ἐόν· Νέστωρ δ' ὁ γέρον ἀμογητὶ ἄειρεν.
 Ἐν τῷ βάσφι κύκησε, γυνὴ εἰκυῖα θεῇσιν,
 Οἶνω Πραμνίδω, ἐπὶ δ' αἷγειον κυῆ τυρόν
 Κνήστω χαλκείῃ, ἐπὶ δ' ἄλφιστα λευκὰ πάλυνεν·
 Πινόμεναι δ' ἐκέλευσεν, ἐπεὶ β' ὥπλισσε κυκεῖω.
 Τῷ δ' ἐπεὶ οὖν πίνοντ' ἀφέτην πολυκαγκέα δίψαν,

Μέθοισιν τροπῶντο πρὸς ἀλλήλους ἐνέποντες.

Πάτροκλος δὲ ὕρθησιν ἐρίστατο, ἰσάθεος φῶς.—Λ. 627-645.

“A table first with azure feet she placed
Whose ample orb a brazen charger graced ;
Honey new pressed, the sacred flower of wheat,
And wholesome garlic crowned the sav’ry treat ;
Next her white hand an antique goblet brings —
A goblet sacred to the PYLIAN kings
From eldest times : embossed with studs of gold,
Two feet support it, and four handles hold ;
On each bright handle, bending o’er the brink,
In sculptured gold, two turtles seem to drink ;
A massy weight, yet heaved with ease by him,
When the brisk nectar overlooked the brim.
Tempered in this, the nymph of form divine
Pours a large portion of the PRAMNIAN wine ;
With goat’s milk cheese and flav’rous taste bestows,
And last with flour the smiling surface strews.
This for the wounded prince the dame prepares,
The cordial beverage reverend NESTOR shares ;
Salubrious draughts the warrior’s thirst allay,
And pleasing conference beguiles the day.
Meantime PATROCLUS, by ACHILLES sent,
Unheard approached, and stood before the tent.”*

To the inquiry of Patroclus, Nestor replies with feigned astonishment that Achilles should condescend to take any notice of those who had the misfortune to be wounded ; and after enumerating the most illustrious chieftains who had been disabled, bursts forth into an eloquent narrative of his own eagerness for the field of youth, which he impliedly contrasts with the supineness of Patroclus and the hero Pelides. Pope, however, remarks severely on him “for being too long. He crowds incident upon incident ; and when he speaks of himself, he expatiates upon his own great actions, very naturally, indeed, to old age, but unseasonably in the present juncture. When he comes to speak of his killing the son of Augias, he is so well pleased with himself that he forgets the distress of the army, and can not leave his favorite subject until he has given us the pedigree of his relations, his wife's name, her excellence, the command he bore, and the fury with which he assaulted him. These and many other circumstances, as they have no visible allusion to the design of the speech, seem to be unfortunately introduced." If this be not hyper-criticism, and that of the very poorest and paltriest kind—worthy only of some prating Zoilus or Dennis, but not of Alexander Pope—I know not what the word means. The refutation of the little Queen Anne's man may be safely left to a female, who thus brains him, not with a fan, but with a weapon even more powerful—a pen: "Patrocle retenu par Nestor voit de ses yeux l'extrémité ou les Grecs sont réduits: en s'en retournant, il rencontre Eurypile blessé il est obligé de le mener dans sa tente, et de le penser, et pendant qu'il est occupé à ce devoir si nécessaire, il voit les retranchements forcez. * * * Au reste, ce conte est placé icy avec beaucoup d'art, car le but de Nestor est de retenir Patrocle jusqu'au à fin que cette veüe si touchante le dispose à aller faire son rapport à Achille et à intercéder pour eux auprès de luy."* So that there is deep design in all the digressions into which the old man slides. This I take to be a satisfactory answer to the objections of Pope.

* Pope, as usual, makes a blunder here. He had just before said that Patroclus “had found” the chief descending from the chariot, whereas in truth he had not then come up.—W. M.

In Barnes' splendid Homer there is a complete epitome of this ballad. As I think it greatly elucidates what, without it, to many might seem intricate, I insert it here:—

Νηλεὺς ὁ Πηλεΐδωνος ἱππικώτατος τῶν καθ' αὐτὸν γενομένων ἔπειψεν εἰς Ἕλιν ἵππους ἐς τῶν ὑπ' Αὔγεον συντελομένων ἀγῶνα· Νίκησαντων δὲ τούτων, φθόνησας Αὔγείας ἀπέσπασε τούτους καὶ τοὺς ἥμιχλους ἄφηκεν ἄπρακτους· Νηλεὺς δὲ γνοὺς, ἡσυχίαν ἤγε. Νεστωρ δὲ ὁ παῖδων αὐτοῦ νεώτατος στρατῶν ἄθροισας ἐπηλθεν Ἕλιδι, καὶ πολλοὺς ἀποκτεῖνας ἀπελαβε τοὺς ἵππους, καὶ οὐκ ὀλίγην τῶν πολέμιων ἀπέσυραν λείαν. Ἡ ἱστορία παρὰ Φερεκνέδη.

* Madame Dacier in her Notes.—W. M.

Nestor's First Essay in Arms.

I.

OH! was I as erst in my youthful day,
In vigor and strength the same, 670
When we and the Eleans about a prey
Of cattle to combat came;
When by my hand Itymones fell
To the rescue rushing on;
(Of Hypirochus who was wont to dwell
In Elis, gallant son.)

II.

In the foremost line as he guarded his kine,
I stretched him amid the dead;
While with fear and amaze did the wild troops gaze 675
Whom he from his farm-lands led
Fifty flocks of goats, as many sheep,
And fifty drove of swine;
Fifty lowing herds at one night's sweep
I drove from the plain as mine.

III.

And thrice fifty mares of yellow main,
And with them many a foal, 680
And we drove them to Neleus who held his reign
In those olden times o'er the Pylian plain,
And rejoiced was he in his soul
That to me, so young in my first essay,
Should so rich a booty fall;

And by heralds at dawn of the breaking day,
It was proclaimed to all.

685

IV.

To whom debt was due all Elis through
Should meet in the spoils to share ;
And together the Pylian chieftains drew,
And made a division fair ;
For many a score of ancient date
Was to poor Pylos owed,
For we were reduced to low estate
By the strength of a demigod.

V.

For Hercules came in years gone by,
And by him were our best men slain ;
Twelve gallant sons had Neleus, and I
Did then the last remain ;
The Epeians, therefore, thought they might dare
In their haughty meanness strong ;
To a people so weak they refused to spare
Insults of deed, or tongue.

690

695

VI.

A lowing herd and a fleecy flock,
In number of hundreds three,
As his share with the shepherds old Neleus took,
For the heaviest claim had he.
Four horses famed for glories won
When contending for the prize,
As for a tripod they went to run,
Were seized in a shameful wise.

700

VII.

King Augias stopped them travelling on,
 And back the driver came,
 His race not run, his coursers gone,
 With anger filled and shame.
 Large, therefore, the share might my father choose,
 To the people he gave the rest,
 That none might his fairness in drolling accuse,
 To divide as it pleased him best. 705

VIII.

And now our various labors done,
 Due sacrificial cheer
 We offered the gods outside the town,
 Free from the pressing fear;
 But on the third morn, of foot and horse
 A mighty gathering came;
 The Molians armed them with the force,
 Though but boys unknown to fame. 710

IX.

A distant town Thryoessa stands
 Where Alpheus' waters sweep
 At the edge remote of Pylos' sands,
 Perched on the rocky steep.
 This far-off town they sought to gain,
 And to use it at their need;
 But when they had traversed all the plain
 Athene came with speed 715

X.

By night; and the Pylians to arms she bid,
 And they answered with delight;

But my steeds of war old Neleus hid,
To keep me from the fight.
He said I knew not the works of war,
And yet to the field I sped,
Where I fought, though on foot, the horsemen near, 720
By Athene's orders led.

XI.

Close by Arene the Minyas flows,
And falls into the sea,
Where the Pylian horsemen, till morning rose,
Awaited our infantry.
Then full of force our armor shine, 725
By Alpheus' banks we stood,
And we sacrificed there to the powers divine,
And first to the Olympian God.

XII.

To Alpheus a steer—to Posidon a steer,
And a heifer all unbroke
To Pallas—and then our festal cheer
Throughout the ranks we took. 730
And the livelong night in our arms we lay,
Close by the rushing tide,
While to Pylos the Epeians made their way,
Camping its walls beside.

XIII.

And soon as morning's dawn was seen,
Scattering its light around, 735
Praying to Jove, and Wisdom's Queen,
We for the fight were bound ;

When we fairly joined us in the fray,
By me was the first man slain;
No horses longer I needed that day,
And my father's scheme was vain.

XIV.

Brave Moleus, whom I made to bleed,
Had chosen as a bride
King Augias' daughter, fair Agamede, 740
By whom the virtues of plant and weed,
Wherever grown, were tried.
And I slew him there with my brazen spear,
And as in the dust he rolled,
In his chariot I drove in hot career
To the foremost warriors bold.

XV.

And hither and thither the Epeians fled,
When they saw that warrior fall, 745
Their horse to the fight who had always led,
And was foremost in valor's call.
But on I rushed, like a darksome blast,
And from fifty chariots soon,
To bite the dust two riders were cast,
By my right arm alone.

XVI.

And the Molian twins I there had slain 750
But for the pitchy cloud
In which their father, who rules the main,
Did them from danger shroud.
Then Jove assisting across the field,
We made the Epeians fly,

The men we slay, and their corsers yield
Of armor a rich supply.

755

XVII.

Till we came to Buprasium, rich in wheat,
Our horse rode conquering still,
Under Olenia's rocky retreat
And Alicium's distant hill.
And there their last man low I laid;
And much honor we lavished free,
First 'mong the gods to Jove they paid,
'Mong mankind first to me.

761

HOMERIC TRANSLATIONS.

I.

The Wile of Juno.*

FROM THE ILIAD.—BOOK XIV. 153-353.

Queen Juno does an artful wile,
'Gainst Jupiter employ ;
And hinders him, by aid of sleep,
From giving help to Troy.

I.

THE golden-throned queen of Heaven beheld
The arduous conflict from the Olympian height ;
Well pleased she saw, upon the ensanguined field,
King Neptune toiling in the glorious fight :
But Jove she viewed not with the like delight
On watery Ida's loftiest peak reclined ;
The goddess, filled with hatred at his sight,
Stood pondering long what method she could find,
With artful wile to cheat the Almighty Thunderer's mind.

* This translation appeared in Blackwood's Magazine, for July, 1820, and was introduced in a note to "Dear and excellent Mr. North," commencing thus : "Although I have no doubt your readers have a due sense of the merits of Pope's translation—the most elegant—and, of Cowper's, the most exact, in our language ; and although many of them have, I doubt not, dipped into the rough but energetic stream of old Chapman with pleasure, yet I presume to hope, that the following attempt to exhibit a small fragment of the Iliad, in the rhythm of Spenser, may not be altogether unacceptable."—M.

II.

Thus she resolves at length ; to go to Ide,
Adorned with all the aiding powers of art ;
There on the force of beauty she relied,
To win the Ægis-bearing monarch's heart ;
Then from the fight to turn his eyes apart,
Bending his lids with sleep's oblivious load ;
Pleased with the thought she hastens to depart,
And speeds her steps to gain her own abode,
Built by her favorite son, Vulcan the artist God.

III.

Then to her secret bower she bent her way,
None, save herself, its threshold ever passed ;
Its doors she oped with her mysterious key,
Then entering, closed the splendid portal fast :
O'er her fair form ambrosial streams she cast,
And oil, soft fragrant, grateful to the sense ;
Its powerful perfume from the chamber past
Through the whole dome ; the gales conveyed it thence,
O'er all the Heavens and earth new fragrance to dispense.

IV.

This labor done, she wreathes her heavenly hair,
On her immortal head in curls to twine ;
Then round her casts the robe of beauty rare,
Which Pallas wrought with many a rich design ;
Its folds above bright golden clasps confine,
A circling zone close binds it at the waist,
A zone round which a hundred tassels shine,
A splendid fringe ; then in her ears she placed
Her sparkling rings of gold, with three fair brilliants graced.

V.

Next her fine form the mantle's folds surround,
New-woven, of splendor dazzling as the sun ;
Her sandals last upon her feet she bound,
And then the pleasing cares of dress were done ;
Straight from her bower to Venus has she gone,
Whom she addressed, withdrawing her apart ;
“ Say, daughter dear, shall my request be won ?
Or wilt thou scorn my suit, enraged at heart
That I espouse the Greek, and thou the Trojan part ? ”

VI.

Fair Venus gave the queen a mild reply,
“ Be thy request, imperial Juno, made,
Nor fear that Venus will the suit deny ;
If I can grant thy bidding is obeyed.”
With artful wile the heavenly sovereign said :
“ Grant that I may those powerful charms display,
By which the sons of Heaven and earth are swayed ;
For I to earth's far limits bend my way,
Where Ocean, sire of Gods, and ancient Tethys sway.

VII.

“ Me to their realm my mother Rhea sent,
Where I was bred beneath the fostering care ;
Where Saturn, under earth and ocean pent,
Resigned to Jove the empire of the air.
I haste to reconcile the ancient pair,
Since angry quarrels have disturbed their peace ;
No more the genial couch of love they share,
But if my voice should bid the contest cease,
How would, their former love, for such kind care, increase.”

VIII.

“Could I refuse,” the queen of smiles replied,
“The regal consort of the Almighty Sire?”
Then from her breast the cestus she untied,
In which was stored whate’er can love inspire;
In it was tender passion, warm desire,
Fond lovers’ soft and amorous intercourse,
Th’ endearing looks and accents that can fire
The soul with passionate love’s resistless force,
’Gainst which the wisest find in wisdom no resource.

IX.

Into Saturnia’s hand she gave the zone,
And said, “Conceal this cestus in thy breast—
Such is th’ embroidered girdle’s power, that none
Can e’er refuse to grant thee thy request.”
Gladly the queen received it, and expressed
Her heartfelt pleasure by a gracious smile;
Quick to her bosom she the girdle pressed:—
Fair Venus sought the Thunderer’s lordly pile,
And Juno left the skies to seek the Lemnian isle.

X.

Above Pieria’s realms the goddess speeds,
O’er fair Emathia, o’er the mountains steep
Of snowy Thrace, renowned for generous steeds;
Nor touched the earth. She then descends to sweep
From Atho’s summit o’er the billowy deep;
Lemnos, where noble Thoas held command,
Quickly she gains, and meets the god of sleep;
Death’s drowsy brother taking by the hand,
She urges thus her suit in accents soft and bland:—

XI.

“Sleep, whose dominion gods and men obey,
If to assist me thou didst e’er incline,
Assist me now. I grateful shall repay,
If Jove’s bright eyes to slumber thou consign,
While in his fond embraces I recline.
A golden throne Vulcan my son shall mould,
In recompense for this, with art divine ;
A throne and footstool of the purest gold,
Which will thy shapely feet at the gay feast uphold.”

XII.

Sleep thus replied : “Saturnia, queen supreme,
On any other should my influence fall
Among th’ immortals, even upon the stream
Of ancient Ocean, parent of us all,
But not on Jove, save when he deigns to call.
At thy request I ventured once before
In my soft bonds his senses to enthrall,
What time his conquering galleys from the shore
Of subjugated Troy the great Alcides bore.

XIII.

“Around his soul my balmy influence cast
Lulled into sleep th’ all-seeing eyes of Jove ;
While, roused by thee, the terrors of the blast
Against his son in tempest fury strove,
And into populous Cos his vessels drove
Far from his friends—when Jove awaked again
He hurled th’ immortals through the halls above ;
Me chief he sought, to ’whelm me in the main,
Did not resistless Night his ’vengeful ire restrain.

XIV.

"To her, who spreads her unsubdued control
O'er men and gods, I bent my hasty flight,
Jove then forgave, though angry in his soul,
For he revered the power of ancient Night.
Then canst thou me forgetful thus invite,
Rashly again the sovereign's wrath to dare?"
"Let not such idle thoughts thy soul affright."
Juno replied, "Has Jupiter such care
For Ilium's haughty sons, as for his valorous heir?"

XV.

"Can they to him their lofty lineage trace?
But come, I'll gift thee with a heavenly bride,
Pasithea, the fair, the youthful Grace,
The maid for whose bright charms thou long hast sighed."
She ceased, o'erjoyed the slumberous god replied,
"By Styx, inviolable river, swear;
Let one hand touch the ocean's level tide,
Let fruitful earth the other hand upbear,
That the dark gods below the solemn vow may hear.

XVI.

"That they may witness, from the depths of space,
Where round old Saturn circled they remain,
That thou wilt gift me with that heavenly Grace
For whose bright charms I sigh so long in vain."
Fair Juno took the oath; in solemn strain
By name invoking from the realms below
The subtartarean gods, the Titan train,
That they the sacred covenant might know,
Thus was the contract made, and ratified the vow.

XVII.

Then bent on speed, the Imbrian shore they leave,
And wrapt in darkness, for Mount Ida make ;
Arrived at Lectos, springing from the wave,
Aloft in air their soaring course they take ;
Beneath their feet the lofty forests shake,
As o'er their topmost boughs in haste they flew,
And where the branches formed a veil opaque,
Somnus remained, to shun the Thunderer's view,
Perched in a lofty fir, the tallest there that grew.

XVIII.

Changed to a mountain bird, concealed from all,
Close nestling in the shadowing boughs he lies,
(The shrill-toned bird which men Cymindis call, Calchis the immortals name it in the skies),
Meanwhile to Gargarus Saturnia hies,
And there she met the cloud-compelling Jove :
He saw ! he loved ! such beauties met his eyes,
That all his soul love's warmest transports move :
Not warmer did he feel when first he learned to love.

XIX.

Not even when first in her encircling arms,
In sweet, in stolen embraces, he reclined ;
Seized with desire, enraptured with her charms,
He thus addressed the queen in accents kind :
" Why didst thou leave thy car and steeds behind,
And thus on foot from far Olympus stray ?"
Him Juno answered, with dissembling mind,
" To Earth's far limits I direct my way,
Where Ocean, sire of Gods, and ancient Tethys sway.

XX.

“In youth they reared me with parental care,
And now to them I hasten as a friend;
For filled with wrath, the couch no more they share,
And much I wish the angry strife to end;
At Ida’s foot my steeds and car attend,
Seated on which o’er land and sea I speed;
But ere on this long tour my course I bend,
I ask thy leave; for quarrel it might breed,
Did I, unknown to thee, to Ocean’s streams proceed.”

XXI.

Her answered thus the cloud-compelling Jove:—
“That task, fair queen, another time perform;
But now devote the precious hours to love;
For ne’er did mortal on immortal form
My soul ere this with such fierce passion warm:
Not even Ixion’s wife, from whose embrace
Pirithous came, had such a power to charm;—
Not even fair Danae, maid of matchless grace,
From whom brave Perseus sprung, noblest of human race!

XXII.

“Not so I loved the royal maid of Tyre,
From whom just Rhadamanth and Minos came;
Nor did Alcmena’s charms such love inspire,
Who bore Alcides, chief of glorious name;
Not so did Semele my soul inflame,
Who Bacchus, joyous god to mortals, bore;
Not so I loved Queen Ceres, fair-haired dame;
Nor Leto—no, nor even thyself before,
As now with fond desire transported I adore.”

XXIII.

With artful words Queen Juno answered Jove,
 "What dost thou thus, impatient king, propose?
 Wouldst thou the sacred mysteries of love
 On Ida's top to open view expose?
 What would ensue if, ere from sleep we rose,
 Some God should view me locked in thy embrace,
 And to the Immortal Powers the tale disclose?
 Ne'er to thy dome could I my steps retrace,
 Arising from thy couch, confounded in disgrace.

XXIV.

"But if to love thy wishes be disposed,
 To thine own bower, by Vulcan built, repair;
 His art the solid doors has firmly closed,
 And there the genial bed of love we'll share."
 "Nor God nor man," cried Jove, "(dismiss that care)
 Shall view us here; for such a dusky cloud
 Of gold shall darken the surrounding air,
 Not even the sun shall pierce th' obscuring shroud,
 Whose beams with brightest powers of splendor are endowed."

XXV.

He spoke, and round the queen his arms he flung.
 Beneath them Earth the freshest herbage threw;
 For their soft couch her hyacinth up sprung,
 The saffron flower, the lotus bathed in dew;
 Upraised on this they lay concealed from view;
 A golden cloud enveloped them around,
 Distilling dew-drops of resplendent hue;
 The monarch's arms his lovely spouse surround,
 On Gargarus' lofty top, in love and slumber drowned.

Thus Jupiter with Juno here,	While Ajax, helped by Neptune's might,
Forgot the fight below,	Does Hector overthrow.

II.

Bacchus, or the Pirates.*

FROM THE ILIAD.—HYMN V.

[Ἀμφὶ Διώνυσον Σεμέλης ἐρικυδέος μδν, κ. τ. λ.]

I SHALL now a tale relate,
Of Bacchus, son of Semele;
How upon a cliff he sate,
Washed by the ever-barren sea.

* This translation appeared in Blackwood's Magazine, for June, 1821. It was preceded by a note from Maginn as follows:—

“DEAR CHRISTOPHER: I send you a short Homeric hymn, translated into that lyric metre of which Sir Walter Scott is the mighty master. How I have succeeded, must of course be left to others to determine; but I may say, that I am decidedly of opinion that the measure might be advantageously employed in rendering several passages in the romantic parts of the classical poets. There are a great many portions of Homer particularly, which are peculiarly fit for it. Lord Byron, in his dedication of the Corsair, justly observes, that no one has been able to manage with perfect success, the dangerous facility of the octosyllabic verse, but the Ariosto of the North. I agree with his lordship altogether; even in his own hands, or those of Moore, it is by no means equally well managed. Coleridge could give it its fullest and most bewitching melody; but I fear that we call on him in vain, and I am sorry for it. Many poets of most respectable powers have failed completely, which I mention to excuse myself, if I be judged to have followed their example.”

To the above Christopher North appended the following remarks: “We have a misty sort of recollection of a translation of this poem, by Mr L. Hunt, whereof the first two lines only have remained in our memory. They are as follows:

“‘Of Bacchus let me tell a sparkling story.—

’Twas by the sea-side on a promon — tory.’

But the rest of the translation, and how he cockneyized at the expense of Homer, is it not to be found in the shops of the trunk-makers?”—M.

A youth, scarce passing from the years
Of boyhood, the gay God appears.
Dark waved the tresses of his head,
And round his beauteous form was spread

A mantle dipped in Tyrian dye.

When swift across the azure deep
A crew of Tuscan pirates sweep,

Driven on by evil destiny.

Who, when they see the youth divine,
With many a secret nod and sign,
To seize him as a prey combine.
Instant they spring upon the land,
And grasp the God with felon hand ;
Then with their captive, glad at heart,
Quick to their galley they depart.
The crew were joyous, for they thought
That they a gallant prize had brought—

Deeming him, from his regal air,

The offspring of a high born King ;

And soon, with cruel hands, they dare

Round him the rigorous bands to fling.

They bound him, but the hope was vain
To hold the God in servile chain ;
The flexile withs,* which they had twined
Round hand and foot, self-loosed unbind.
Unshackled sat the youth—a smile
Played in his dark blue eye the while.
The pilot marked it ; at the view
Awestruck, he thus addressed the crew :

* An expressive word, as it seems to me, but I fear almost obsolete. It is used by the translators of the Bible. "And Samson said unto her, if they bind me with seven green withs, that were never dried," &c. Judges xvi. 7. and again, verses 8, 9.—W. M.

—“ O friends, unhappy friends, I fear
That you have seized a powerful God ;
Wo to our vessel, if it bear
Such captive o’er the wat’ry road.
King Jupiter he seems to be,
Or Phœbus of the silver bow,
Or Neptune, monarch of the sea,
And not a son of earth below.
Even from his form ’tis plain he comes
From high Olympus’ heavenly domes,
Haste then, companions, and restore
The immortal stranger to the shore,
Nor farther efforts make
To hold him prisoner, lest his wrath
Should with fierce storms pursue our path,
Or bid the whirlwind wake.”
“ Fool !” the indignant captain cried,
“ Fair blows the wind along the tide ;
Then spread the sail, arrange the yard :
That is thy duty, ours to guard
The captive we have ta’en.
He goes with us ; whether we wend
To Egypt, or to Cyprus bend ;
Or farther o’er the main,
Reach the cold regions of the North.
At last he will disclose his kin,
And rank, and riches ; by his worth
We then shall know what price he’ll win.
Steer onward fearlessly ; for Heaven
His fate into our hands has given.”

He spoke—the mast was raised—the sail
Spread bellying to the prosperous gale.

They went—but wonders strange and new
Ere long arose before their view.

First round the sable vessel's side

Gushed bubbling forth a flood of wine,
Exhaling from its balmy tide

Ambrosial perfume, scent divine.
With awe th' affrighted rovers stood,
Gazing upon the magic flood.

Then round the sail, high over head
A vine its wandering tendrils spread

Deep hung with clustering fruit ;
Its clasping arms about the mast
An ivy gemmed with berries cast

With many a flowery shoot ;
And every rower's bench around
Was with a festal chaplet crowned.
“Hasté, haste, Mededes, gain the shore,”

Loud on the pilot was their cry.
Vain prayer—that refuge they no more
Are destined to espy.

Changed was his form—and lo ! the God
In lion shape the deck bestrode,
With hideous roaring ; and a bear*
Furred in a rugged coat of hair

He raised by wondrous sorcery
In the mid-vessel : where, oh ! where Shall the sad pirates flee ?

The bear sprung up—the lion dread
Glared awful from the vessel's head,

* I think this bear is rather a superfluous monster ; but a translator must go through thick and thin with his author. I suspect the passage is interpolated, and recommend the next editor of the Homeric hymns, to consider the propriety of striking out the lines in question.—W. M.

They, terror-smitten, turned and fled
And round the unfearing pilot throng—
Unfearing, for he did no wrong.
On rushed the God in furious mood,
 And seized the chieftain of the band;
The rest, when his dire fate they viewed,
Plunged—headlong plunged, into the flood,
 And swam to gain the land.
In vain; the God's resistless force
Changed them to dolphins in their course.
But the just pilot he did bless
With life and flowing happiness.
"Thou need'st not fear; thy worth," he said,
"A mighty friend in me has made;
For I am Bacchus, son of Jove,
 And Semele, his Theban love."
Hail, son of bright-eyed Semele; thy praise
Shall still be sung by me in tuneful lays.

III.

The Visit of Helen to the Scæan Gate.*

FROM THE ILIAD.—Book V. 121–244.

THIS is an attempt to turn a passage of the Iliad into the metre used by Sir Walter Scott. The passage selected is that which much resembles a scene frequently repeated in his works, both of verse and prose. Helen describes to Priam and his elders the persons and the characters of the Grecian chiefs as Rebecca describes the attack on the castle of Front de Bœuf to Ivanhoe. The battle in Marmion is related in nearly a similar manner; and many other instances could be collected.

I.

IRIS to Helen, fair-armed dame, 121
On a speedy message came;
In her form she seemed to be Like unto Laodice,
Fairest of Priam's daughters she,
Of royal Helicaon spouse,
The hope of old Antenor's house.
She found the lovely queen at home,
Weaving a web of gorgeous hue;
And as she plied the busy loom,
The various woes of war she drew,
Which Trojan knight and cuirassier
Achaian, suffered for her sake:
"O sister dear, come hasten here,"
So standing close swift Iris spake,

* From Fraser's Magazine, for May, 1835.

"A prospect strange! some wondrous change
 The Greeks and Trojans seem to make.
 Long years in deadly war they stood,
 Thirsting for each other's blood;
 But now they sit in silent lines,
 And battle's voice no more we hear;
 Each on his shield at ease reclines,
 Stuck on its butt is each tall spear;
 And Alexander will advance
 To meet bold Menelaus in fight;
 And he who conquers with the lance,
 Shall win thee as his own of right."

138

II.

As thus she spake, o'er Helen's soul
 A tender feeling sweetly stole;
 Soft thoughts upon the instant come
 Across the lovely lady's mind,
 Of her first husband and her home,
 Her kin and parents left behind.
 Wrapt in a veil as white as snow,
 Goes she from her secret bower;
 While down her cheeks in gentle flow
 Tears by sad memory summoned shower.
 Not alone she chose to go,
 But with her took her handmaidens two—
 C  thre, a child of Pittheus' line,
 And Clymene of lustrous eyne.
 Soon they reached the Sc  au gate,
 Where the aged chieftains sate:
 Round Priam, Ilion's aged king,
 Panthus, Thym  etes, formed a ring,
 And Hicetaon, in the wars
 Distinguished as a branch of Mars.

With them Ucalegon she found,
And old Antenor seated there,
In Trojan councils more renowned
For sage advice no statesman were.
Age chilled their blood, and now the sword
No longer in the fight they wield,
But from their souls, with wisdom stored,
The counsels wise of age they yield.
As the crickets on the tree
Pour forth their shrilly melody,
So on the tower these chieftains old
Of Ilion serious converse hold.
When they were of Helen fair
Coming to the gate aware,
Each to each in whispered tone
What of her they thought made known :
“ Who can feel wonder or amaze
That Greece and Troy such length of days
Should toil on toil, and wo on wo,
For such a woman undergo ?
In beauty she can match with even
The immortal goddesses of heaven.
But charming as she is, yet still
Would she were gone from Ilion's towers,
And homeward sailing, spare the ill
Her presence heaps on us and ours.”

160

III.

Her Priam spake in accents mild :
“ Come sit by me, my darling child ;
Come sit by me, that you may see
The warriors of your own countree —
Your first espoused and many a one
Beside in land Achaian known.

I blame you not—the will of Heaven
Has hither this misfortune driven :
It is the gods, not you, have sent
The Grecian host, on slaughter bent.
Tell me yon stately chieftain's name,
Of mighty bulk and stature tall—
Others a loftier height may claim,
But he is noblest of them all ;
A goodlier man I ne'er have seen,
Nor one of more commanding mien—
Of kingly rank is he, I ween.”

Then the beauty without peer,
Helen, the queen of women, said,
“O father ! whom I must revere
With feelings of respect and dread,
Would that an ill death I had died
Before I crossed the Ægean tide,
To sail for Ilium with your son,
Leaving my native bower behind,
My brothers, my companions kind—
My daughter dear, my only one !
But what is past we can't recall,
And now the weary lot is mine
To let the wasting tear-drop fall,
Through ceaseless hours in grief to pine.
It is to me an easy task
To name the chief of whom you ask :
King Agamemnon, whose command
Extends o'er many a wide-spread land.
Well can he as a monarch sway,
And bravely mix in battle fray.
He was my brother once, ere blame
Had fixed its taint upon my name,

And made it as a word of shame."
The old man with admiring look
On Agamemnon gazed, and spoke :
" O son of Atreus, born wert thou
 To prosperous fate in favoring hour !
Swayed by thy will, before thee bow
 The myriad hosts of Græcia's power.
Once in Phrygia, clad with vines,
 Did I in former days campaign,
And there I saw the Phrygian lines
 Of horsemen skirring o'er the plain ;
Otreus and Mygdon led their ranks,
Encamped upon the Sangar's banks.
I joined them as ally when they
 The Amazon man-defiers fought ;
But far less numerous their array
 Than that which thou to Troy hast brought." 190

IV.

He next Ulysses saw, and said,
 " That other chief, my daughter, name ;
Less than Atrides by the head,
But broader is his shoulders spread ;
 Ampler his chest's capacious frame ;
 His armor on the ground is lying ;
And 'mid the warlike ranks of Greece
 His marshalling course he still is plying,
Like to a ram of thickest fleece,
 Like to that father of the fold,
For here the place he seems to keep
Which, in a flock of snow-white sheep,
 The stately ram is wont to hold."
" Ulysses he," she said, " the wise.

From Ithaca's all-craggy isle,
With whom no chief or statesman vies
In varied strategem and wile."
"Lady," Antenor said, "I well
Can witness to the tale you tell:
To Troy did Menelaus come,

And wise Ulysses for your sake,
On solemn mission, and their home
My honored house they chose to make—
And sitting at my board, I knew
The persons of the princes two;
And knew how they in speech expressed
The thoughts that labored in their breast.
When they both the assembled throng
Of gathering Trojans stood among,
Then Menelaus might you see
Towering tall above his mate;

But graver was the dignity
Of wise Ulysses as he sate.
And when he spoke, with rapid tongue
Did Menelaus disclose his mind;
His sparing words, but never wrong,
In speech harmonious flowed along—

No babbler he of prating kind.
When 'twas Ulysses' turn to rise,
Upon the ground he fixed his eyes,
And motionless his sceptral wand
Held like a blockhead in his hand;
You would have deemed him fool or rude,
Or madman of a passionate mood:
But when his words began to flow,
Soft and thick as wintry snow,
Pouring from his mighty breast

In torrent without pause or rest,
Then no mortal whatsoe'er
With Ulysses could compare;
And all enraptured as he spoke,
We cared not to observe his look."

224

V.

Next Ajax caught the old man's eye :

"Who is yon stalwart Greek," he said,
"Above the Achivi standing high,
By shoulders broad and lofty head?"
"Ajax," she said, "is yonder knight,
Prop of the Greeks in many a fight,
And there Idomeneus is standing,

Girt with his chiefs in regal style—
You mark his godlike form commanding

Amid the peers of Creta's isle :
Often have I in the house
Of Menelaus, my former spouse,
Seated Idomeneus at meat,
When sailing from the land of Crete.
And many a dark-eyed Greek below,

From other days remembered well,
Is there, whose manly form I know,

Whose name and nation I could tell—

But ah! my weary eyes in vain
In quest of other objects strain—
Of objects they can meet no more :

I see not here my brothers dear,
My brothers whom one mother bore ;
I see not Pollux stout of hand,

I see not Castor's fiery steeds—

Have they not sought the Trojan strand
From Lacedæmon's lovely meads?
Or have they in their galleys come
With others o'er the ocean foam,
And now from very shame refrain
From mingling on the battle plain,
Among their brother chieftains, stung
With memory of the dire disgrace,
Which I, unhappy wretch, have flung
For ever on their stainless race?"
She spoke, but those for whom she wept,
Buried beneath their native clay,
In earth's benignant bosom slept,
In Lacedæmon far away.

COMEDIES OF LUCIAN.

Comedies of Lucian.

I.

Timon; or, The Misanthrope.*

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

TIMON.

JUPITER.

MERCURY.

PLUTUS.

IT appears to me that Lucian has never been adequately translated into any language—certainly, not in English; but I shall not enter upon detailed criticism on that head. One principal reason is, that no other prose can represent the peculiar

* From Fraser's Magazine for January, 1839. For the information of the ladies, the following account of Lucian, from the Encyclopædia Americana, is here subjoined:—"Lucian, a Greek author, distinguished for his ingenuity and wit, was born in Samosata, the capital of Comagene, on the Euphrates, during the reign of Trajan [and lived between A. D. 120 and 200, under Trajan, Hadrian, and Antonines]. He was of humble origin, and was placed, while young, with his uncle, to study statuary; but being unsuccessful in his first attempts, he went to Antioch, and devoted himself to literature and forensic rhetoric. He soon, however, confined himself to the latter, and travelled in several countries (among others, Greece, Italy, Spain, and Gaul) as a rhetorician. In the reign of Marcus Aurelius Antoninus, he was made procurator of the province of Egypt, and died in the reign of Commodus 80 or 90 years old. The works of Lucian, of which many have come down to us, are narrative, rhetorical, critical, and satirical, mostly in the form of dialogues. The most popular are those in which he ridicules with great wit the popular mythology and the philosophical sects, particularly his Dialogues of the Greek of Lucian. It is essentially as dramatic as Menander; and the style, sentiment, and characters, bear in many features a great similarity to our older comedians—

“The Fox, the Alchemist, the silent Woman, Done by Ben Jonson, and outdone by no man,”

are remarkably Lucianic; and the Greek wit would have delighted in such characters as Sir Epicure Mammon, or Volpone, or, indeed, any of Jonson's dramatis personæ. Here, therefore, I have made an attempt to render him into our dramatic metre, which I submit to the indulgence of my readers; selecting Timon for a commencement. This dialogue, as Solanus truly says, “Inter Luciani optima merito censeatur. Comœdiam habes elegantissimam, in qua adulatorum non unius generis mores artesque graphice admodum depicti, cum aliis multis ad divitias spectantibus miro artificio exhibentur.” When Solanus, however, proceeds to prefer Lucian to Aristophanes, he will not find many who have read them both to agree with him. “Hoc opusculum qui cum Aristophanis Pluto contulerit, palmam, si mecum sentiat, huic nostro multis de causis quas hic enarrare nimis longum foret, deberi, facile concedet.” Certainly not facile. We might as soon compare Sheridan with Swift, Voltaire with Rabelais.

Gods, and of the Dead. They have given him the character of being the wittiest of the ancient writers. He seems not to belong to any system himself, but he attacks imposture and superstition freely and boldly wherever he finds them. The Epicureans, who, in this respect, agree with him, are therefore treated with more forbearance. The Christian religion, of which, however, he knew little, and that only through the medium of mysticism, was an object of his ridicule. In his sarcasm, he not unfrequently oversteps the bounds of truth, sometimes repeats calumnies against elevated characters, and occasionally, according to the notions of our time, offends against decency, though, in general, he shows himself a friend of morality. The best editions of his works are by Bourdolet (Paris, 1615, fol.), by Hemsterhuis and Reitz (Amsterdam, 1743, 4 vols., 4to), and the Bipont (10 vols., 8vo). Among the English translations are those of Spence, Hickes, and Franklin.”—M.

Timon; or, The Misanthrope.

—♦—
ACT I.

SCENE I.—A Desert near Athens.

TIMON, solus.

O JOVE! the Philian, Xenian, Hetæreian,*
Ephestian, and Asteropete, and Horcian,
Nephelegeretan, and Erigdupous!
Or what beside brainstricken bards may call thee
When puzzled in a line. For chiefly then 5
Thou, God of many Epithets, assist
As Jove the Polyonymous, to prop
The staggering metre, and fill up the void
Of yawning rhythm. Where now, I ask, is laid
Thy far-resounding bolt, thy deep-toned thunder, 10
The blazing flash of thy tremendous lightning?
Have all these dreaded implements become
But empty jest, and mere poetic thunder,
With nothing noisier than their names? Thy bolt,
Song-famed, far-darting, ever-prompt-at-hand, 15
Is, how I know not, all burnt out and cold,

* I have followed the Latin translator in adopting the Greek epithets, without giving an English meaning, for upon their being the standing resources for Greek poets the jest depends. If any body prefers

“O! Jove the friendly, social, hospitable,
Domestic, oath-confirming, lightning-darting,
And cloud-compelling, and loud-thundering!”

it is at his service.—W. M.

With not a single spark of anger left
To frighten evil-doers. They, whose minds
Lead them to perjury, care just as much
For the extinguished wick of last night's lamp, 20
As for thy lightning's all-subduing flame,
They think thy hand has not the power to fling
Aught of more danger than a half-burnt brand
Plucked from the embers. Neither fire nor smoke
Is dreaded from such missile; for they feel 25
That the worst present which its blow can bring
Is smearing them with ashes. Had Salmonens,
Hot and high-spirited as he was, no reason
Upon his side, when he set boldly up
As rival thunderer against a Jove, 30
So cold, and slow to wrath? Why should he not?
When he perceived thee lulled, as with a dose
Of drowsy mandrake, without ears to hear
The voice of perjury, without an eye
To cast upon the wicked. In thy seat 35
Blink thou with blear-eyed glance upon the world,
While thy dull ears like those of age-worn dotards
Are deaf with clogging wax. When thou wert young,
Brimful of spirit, and alive to rage,
Against the men of force or fraud thy war 40
Was constant; holding of the hand was none.
Then at all moments did thy lightning glow,
Thine Ægis shake, thy rattling thunder roll,
And thick as spears in battle flashed thy bolts.
Then quaked the earth, as shaken in a sieve, 45
Down came the snow as mounts, the hail as rocks;
And, to relate the tale in swelling style,
"So fierce the rainy torrent, one would deem
Each drop descending was a river-stream;

Till in a moment, in Deucalion's day, 50
A general shipwreck swept mankind away.
One skiff alone left by the ebbing tide
After much peril gained Lycoris' side,"——
And bore in it one seed of human race,
To propagate far greater villainies. 55
Now hast thou found the natural consequence
Of this thy course of sloth. No sacrifice
Is offered at thine altar ; no one crowns thee,
Except, perhaps, some conqueror at the games ;
And, even he thinks it an idle rite, 60
And done but to comply with ancient custom.
Mankind, thou noblest of the gods, will soon
Make thee a second Saturn, from thy honors
Forcibly thrust. No need have I to tell
How of thy fanes are robbed ; nay, on thyself 65
Have the Olympian thieves laid violent hands.
While thou, high thunderer, couldst not find a voice
To rouse the dogs, or to call in the neighbors,
Who, running to thine aid, might seize the culprits
Preparing for escape. No ! valiant god, 70
Thou Titan conqueror, and giant-killer,
There didst thou, with thy bolt ten cubits long
Grasped in thy right hand, unresisting sit,
While plundering hands sheared off thy golden locks.
But, O, most wondrous ! when is it thy will, 75
That this disgraceful negligence should cease ?
When wilt thou punish such a mass of wrong ?
What number of Deucalions will suffice,
How many Phaëtons, to curb and check
The o'erweening pride of man ? Pass lighter matters : 80
Hear my own case. I, who so many people
Of Athens have uplifted ; made them rich,

From veriest paupers ; helping every one
 Who needed my assistance, pouring, rather,
 My wealth in floods to benefit my friends : 85
 With what result ? I am reduced to want,
 And no one knows me. Nay, the very men
 Who bent in awe before me, fawned upon me,
 Hung on my nod, won't look upon me now ;
 Or, should they meet me walking by the way, 90
 Pass me, as if I were a worn-out tombstone
 Of one long buried, now decayed and fallen,
 Not worth a glimpse. If any chance to spy me
 Coming along, they choose another path,
 As if I were a thing of luckless omen, 95
 Boding of evil : I, not long ago
 Their patron and their savior ! All these wrongs
 Have driven me to the desert ; where, arrayed
 In leathern jerkin, must I till the ground
 For hire of fourpence, and philosophize 100
 In solitude to my spade ; with this one comfort,
 That in this desert haunt I do not see
 The crowd of knaves prospering beyond their meed.
 That were more grievous sorrow. But, great son
 Of Saturn and of Rhea, do shake off 105
 This deep and balmy slumber, which has now
 Outlasted longer than Endymion's sleep.
 Whirl round thy lightning till it glows again ;
 Or kindle it at Ætna, so to make
 A glorious blaze, and show a manly feeling 110
 Of anger worthy of the youth of Jove ;
 (Aside) Unless the tales the Cretans tell are true,
 And their old stories when they point thy tomb.

SCENE II.—Olympus.

JUPITER. MERCURY.

Jup. Who, Mercury, is this man that cries so loud
From Attica, beneath Hymettus' foot, 115
Clad in a leathern jacket, all in filth ?
He, from his stooping posture, I should think,
Is digging — an impertinent, prating fellow,
He's some of your philosophers, perhaps,
Or he'd not dare address such impious words 120
To us.

Mer. What sayest thou, father ? Know'st thou not Timon, the son of Echecratides,
The Colyttensian ? Him, with whom so oft
We used to feast in perfect sacrifices ?
Who from his new-born fortune treated us 125
To hecatombs at a time ? With whom we were wont
So splendidly to keep thy festal days ?

Jup. Alas, the change ! Is that the handsome Timon,
The man of wealth, surrounded by his friends ?
What brought him to this pass ? Abject and foul, 130
A digger, and a hired one I conjecture,
So heavy is his spade.

Mer. Were I to speak
I' th' way of the world, good nature, I should say,
Kindness and sympathy with all in need,
Have ruined him ; but if I spoke the truth, 135
Ignorance, folly, undiscerning waste
Of friendship, never dreaming that his gifts
On wolves and crows were lavished, while the dupe,
Even as the vultures gnawed his very liver,
Thought they were all his friends, his fond companions, 140
Out of mere kindness to himself, rejoicing

In what they could devour, They bared his bones,
 And picked them with due skill; and if within
 They found a grain of marrow, sucked it out,
 And that most carefully; and then departed, 145
 Leaving him withered, from the very roots
 Cut up, no longer to be known or looked at.
 Where finds he now those to assist in turn,
 Or help him in his need? The spade, the jerkin
 You see, are all his portion; so, through shame, 150
 Leaving the city, as a hireling tiller
 He digs the ground, driven crazy by the thought
 That they, whose wealth is all derived from him,
 Now pass him by with supercilious brow,
 Nor even knowing if his name be Timon. 155

Jup. Ay: truly he is one whose case we hold
 Not to be overlooked or slighted; Timon
 Has just occasion for his angry fit,
 And we ourselves should act in the same style
 As those accursed swindlers, were our thoughts 160
 Forgetful of fat thighs of bulls and goats
 Which he as offerings burnt. The savory steam
 Yet dwells within our nostrils: want of leisure
 And bother about perjurers, robbers, larceners,
 Besides the fear of temple-thieving rascals, 165
 Hard to be watched, and now in number great,
 Have left me scarcely winking time. In fact,
 'Tis long since I have looked on Attica,
 Seldom, indeed, since that philosophy
 And wordy quibbles occupy their time: 170
 The noise these wrangling brawlers make disputing
 Drowns all the sound of prayers; for I must sit
 My ears well closed, or have them split asunder
 With cry of, "Virtue," "Incorporeals"—

Nonsense in short—strung forth with noisy voice. 175
 So Timon was neglected, though by no means
 Deserving such a fate. Well, Mercury,
 Take Plutus, and depart with utmost speed.
 Let Plutus bring Thesaurus, and they both
 Must dwell with Timon, and not easily 180
 Depart from him, even though the man's good nature
 Should drive them from the house. As for the flatterers,
 And the ungrateful conduct which they have shown,
 I must resolve hereafter ; they shall suffer
 When I have had my thunder-bolts repaired— 185
 'Two of whose largest flashes have been broken
 And blunted since the day when 'gainst the sophist
 Who taught his pupils that we deities
 Had no existence—Anaxagoras—
 I flung with too much zeal, and missed my aim 190
 (The hand of Pericles was over him) ;
 The lightning on the temple of the kings
 Darted away, and set it all on fire,
 And there was nearly smashed against a stone.
 But they will feel sufficient punishment 195
 If once they see that Timon's rich again.

SCENE III.

MERCURY on his Voyage.

What a fine thing is impudence, and noise,
 And brawling ! Why, not only at the bar,
 But even in prayer, such qualities are useful.
 See how from beggary to wealth extreme 200
 Is Timon raised, merely because he roared
 And bullied in petition, libelling Jove.
 If bending to the earth, he dug in silence,
 He would unmarked have been a digger still.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Olympus.

PLUTUS. JUPITER. MERCURY.

Plut. But, Jupiter, I will not go to him. 205

Jup. Why so, good Plutus, when I give the order?

Plut. Because, by Jove, he hath insulted me,
 And driven me forth, and cut me into pieces,
 Though his paternal friend—ay, almost thrust me
 With pitchforks out of doors—dropped me as fast 210
 As those who handle fire. Shall I return
 Again to be betrayed to trencher-friends,
 Flatterers, and strumpets? Send me, Jove, to those Who feel the value of the gift, whose arms
 Are ready to embrace me; those by whom 215
 I shall be held in honor, and desire;
 And let those gulls stick in that poverty
 Which they prefer to me, and, taking from her
 The spade and jerkin, live with her content
 In wretchedness upon their daily fourpence, 220
 Who once were wont to fling away ten talents
 As an uncounted present.

Jup. No such thing
 Will Timon do. The spade right well has taught him,
 Unless his loins know not the taste of pain,
 How much thou art to Poverty superior. 225
 But I must say that thou art querulous,
 Now blaming him who opens wide the doors,
 And lets thee wander as thou wilt, without
 A jealous thought, or turning of the key;
 In other cases on the rich thou railest, 230
 Complaining of the bars, and bolts, and seals,

That keep thee close, preventing even a peep
Into the light of day. I have heard thee growl
Of being in darkness choked, and thy appearance
Was pale, and full of care, thy fingers cramped 235
As those of money-reckoners, always planning,
If chance were given thee, like a fugitive slave,
To quit those cruel guardians. On the whole,
It did appear to me a dismal thing,
That thou, in brazen or in iron chamber, 240
Should lead, like Danaë, a virgin life,
Under those harsh and rigorous duennas,
Account and Usury. Thou wert wont to say
Their conduct was absurd, who, loving thee
To madness, when they might enjoy thy charms, 245
Dare not to do so ; nor in perfect ease
Will satiate their desires, as if they thought,
While looking upon seal and lock with eye
Unblinking, 'twas enjoyment quite sufficient
Not to enjoy, but (like the dog i' th' manger, 250
Who did not eat the barley, nor permit
The hungry horse to eat it), to prevent
Others' enjoyment ; and with many a laugh
Didst thou deride them for their niggard sparing,
Their ceaseless watch, and, strangest case of all, 255
Their jealousy of themselves, and all the while
Not knowing that some cursed slave or steward,
Or other hireling, will indulge in feasting,
Privily stealing in, and leave the wretched
And misbegotten master by the light 260
Of some poor dim and thirsty, thin-wicked lamp,
To calculate his usances. Is't not then
Somewhat unjust to blame such practices,
And censure Timon for the opposite course ?

Plut. If thou require the truth, it will be plain 265
I blame them both with justice; for the freedom
Of Timon will appear respecting me
Not liberality, but negligence.
And I must count them fools, and deem their conduct
Toward me mere insolence, who shut me up 270
In darkness, there to fatten, swell, and bloat,
Untouched, and ever banished from the light,
Fearing I should be seen, consigned to rot,
For no wrong done, under a load of chains,
Not once reflecting that in some brief space 275
They must depart, and to some lucky owner
Leave me at last. Nor can I speak in praise
Of prodigals, commending only those
Who, as is best due moderation hold,
Not altogether slighting me, nor yet 280
Flinging me all away. Do, Jupiter—
For sake of Jupiter—consider this:
If a man duly wed a fair young damsel,
And heeds her not, and shows no jealous feeling,
But lets her wander as she lists, by night 285
Or by the day in all men's company,
Encouraging gallants, opening his doors,
Playing Sir Pandarus, inviting visits—
Would he appear to love her? Surely, thou,
So versant, Jupiter, in love affairs, 290
Wouldst never say so. On the other hand,
Suppose a man should bring his freeborn wife
Into his house, with hope of lawful offspring,
And never touch the fair and blooming maid,
Nor suffer other eyes to look upon her, 295
But shut her up to lead a virgin life,
Barren of children, all the while declaring

He loved her, and declaring truly too—
 As by his faded hue, his wasted flesh,
 His sunken eyeballs, is most manifest, 300
 Wouldst thou not think him mad, perverting thus
 The end of marriage? Should he not perform
 Conjugal duty, sooner than permit
 A fairfaced, lovely girl, to waste away,
 Keeping her all her life as if she were 305
 A priestess vowed to Ceres? I am angry
 That some should kick me out, and fling me forth,
 While others hold me like a fugitive
 And branded slave in fetters.

Jup. Be not angry 310
 With either party : both of them are punished.
 One set, like Tantalus, without food or drink,
 Gaping with parched tongue alone for gold.
 The others, like poor Phineus, with their meals
 Torn from their throats by Harpies. Go to Timon : 315
 I warrant thou wilt find him wiser now.

Plut. He! Will he ever cease pouring me out,
 As from a tub whose bottom's pierced with holes?
 Before I am fairly in, wishing, perhaps
 To anticipate my flow, lest in a flood 320
 I'd swamp the owner. I appear with him
 To pump in water to the Danaid tub,
 And lose my toil ; the bottom will not hold it ;
 The flowing out will beat the flowing in,
 The chasm below being wider for the efflux, 325
 And the escape incapable of prevention.

Jup. Well, if that hole's not stopped, and the wide vent
 Seriously closed, upon thy flowing forth,
 In some short space, he'll find again his jerkin
 And spade embedded in the lees of the tub. 330

But now depart, and make him rich. And, Mercury,
 Remember, coming back, to call at Ætna,
 And bring the Cyclops hither to repair
 My lightning on their whetstone ; for, just now,
 I shall require to have it rather sharp. 335

SCENE II.—MERCURY and PLUTUS on their Journey.

Mer. Let's forward, Plutus ! Why, what's this ? thou haltest ;

This, my good fellow, I knew not before,
 That thou art lame as well as blind.

Plut. Not always,
 Save when Jove sends me ; then I know not how,
 Growing slowfooted, and in both legs lame,
 I scarce can reach the goal ; and he who waits 340
 Is age-worn ere my advent. When the time
 Comes for departure, then with winged speed,
 Quicker than flight of dreams, I part away ;
 Off goes the sign of starting, and at once
 I am proclaimed the winner, at a bound 345
 Springing along the race-course, the spectators
 Often not seeing how I clear the course.

Mer. Not so—for many could I name to thee
 Who yesterday had not a penny piece
 To buy a halter, now to-day so rich 350
 And costly as to drive in sumptuous carriage
 Horsed with a pair of greys ; to whom a donkey
 Was once above their means ; in purple robe
 And ring-bedizened fingers riding forth,
 Not over sure their wealth is not a dream. 355

Plut. A different case, my friend. I travel, then,
 Not on my own feet ; nor does Jove despatch,
 But Pluto, my commission—Pluto, he

To Plutus nearly namesake, and thereby
 Giver of gold. So when I must depart 360
 They clap me in a will, and seal me close,
 Carry me pick-a-back, and bear me out.
 The corpse meantime in some dark corner lies
 Stretched in the house, a worn-out rag of linen
 Spread o'er his knees, a contest for the cats. 365
 While in the market-place, with open mouths,
 Wait, as the chirping chicks their sparrow-dame,
 Expectant legates. Broken is the seal,
 And cut the string, and opened out the deed ;
 Then my new master is proclaimed — some cousin, 370
 Some toady, or some smooth-cheeked simpering hound
 Of dirtier service, whosoe'er he be,
 Clutching me in the will runs off at speed,
 No longer Pyrrhias, Dromio, Tibias,
 But Megabyzus, Megacles, Protarchus, 375
 Swellingly styled, and leaves the rest behind,
 Gaping in vain, and looking at each other ;
 Suffering a sorrow all too true, because
 So fine a gudgeon from the net's deep bottom
 Scaped after swallowing no small store of bait. 380
 And now this all unbred and thick-skinned fellow,
 Who still is trembling at the thought of the stocks ;
 And when some stander-by will crack a whip,
 Pricking his ears in terrified observance,
 Who worships, as the temple of the gods,* 385
 The grinding-house, falls fiercely all upon me.
 Insulting all he meets, to freeborn men
 Impertinent, and o'er his fellow-slaves
 Wielding the lash, as if he meant to try

* The ἀνακτορον was the slave-market ; therefore, a very natural object of reverence for a slave.—W. M.

If such a power was truly placed within him. 390
 Until at last he meets some petty harlot,
 Or aims at fame of jockeyship, or else
 Gives himself over to some fawning brood
 Of flatterers, who swear that he in looks
 Is handsomer than Nireus, in his birth 395
 Nobler than Cecrops, or King Codrus, wiser
 Even than Ulysses, and in store of wealth
 Richer than sixteen Cræsus together,
 When in a moment the unhappy rascal
 Pours forth the produce of ill-gotten gains, 400
 Won bit by bit by fraud and perjury.

Mer. Thou speakest but the truth. But when thou goest
 On thine own feet, how findest thou the road,
 Blind as thou art? Or how canst thou discern
 Those to whom Jove directs thee, judging right 405
 Those who of wealth are worthy?

Plut. Dost thou think
 I find such persons?

Mer. No, by Jove, not I.
 Else thou wouldst not o'er Aristides pass,
 And go to Callias, or to Hipponicus,
 And many another man of Athens' town 410
 Not worthy of a penny. But inform me,
 What is thy course when sent?

Plut. All up and down
 I wander on my rambles, till by chance
 I stumble upon somebody; and he,
 Whoe'er he may be, carries me away, 415
 Giving to thee, O Mercury! the praise
 For such unhoped-for gain.

Mer. Then Jupiter
 Is sore deceived, in thinking that thy wealth
 Falls upon those deserving of the gift?

Plut. Rightly deceived, who, knowing me stone blind, 420
 Sends me, my friend, to hunt out for a thing
 So hard to find, and for a long time now
 Lost from the world, that not the eyes of Lynceus
 Could easily discover th' indistinct
 And tiny substance. Therefore, as the good 425
 Are scanty, and the scoundrel many hold
 Chief power in all our cities, it is natural
 That I should meet the latter, and by them
 Be netted.

Mer. But whene'er thine hour of flight
 Has come, how dost thou 'scape so easily, 430
 If ignorant of the road?

Plut. I then become
 Acute of sight, and nimble on my feet,
 Just for that sole occasion of my flight.

Mer. One other question: Tell me how it is
 That thou—I speak it plainly—blind, and sallow, 435
 And heavy in thy legs, should find so many
 To woo thee with such love? that all look toward thee?
 That those who win thee think their lot is blessed?
 That those who lose thee scarce endure to live:
 For some I know, and they not few, whose love 440
 For thee is so despairing, that they dash
Into the bosom of the fishy deep,
Or from the summit of the mountain's steep,
 Thinking themselves o'erlooked by thee, because Thou didst not see them from the first. Confess 445
 That they are crazy, if thou know thyself,
 In their mad passion turned on such an object.

Plut. Thinkst thou their eyes behold me as I am,
 Limping and blind, with every other blemish?

Mer. Why not, unless the men themselves are blind? 450

Plut. Not blind, good Mercury ; but ignorance
 And fraud, which now are masters every where,
 Darken their vision : and, beside, I meet them,
 Fearing my ugliness may be all too plain,
 Decked in a loveliest disguise, with gold 455
 And gems, and particolored raiment tricked ;
 So that they, thinking that they truly view
 My real countenance in beauty shining,
 Fall deep in love, and die if of my favors
 They chance to miss. Were they to see me plainly 460
 I do not doubt that they would scorn themselves
 For loving things so loveless and unshapely.

Mer. But when they're rich, and have this very mask
 In their own holding, are they still deceived ?
 If it be lost, why do they sooner part 465
 Their lives than its possession ? Can they, then,
 Be ignorant how factitious is thy beauty,
 Seeing what's all inside ?

Plut. Not a few matters
 In this case aid me, Mercury.

Mer. What are they ?

Plut. When a man meets me, and with open doors 470
 Admits me to his house, there with me enter,
 Unknown to him, Pride, Madness, Boastful Folly,
 Impertinence, and Luxury, and Fraud —
 Ten thousand things beside : seized on by which
 In his very soul, with wonder he admires 475
 Things not of wonder worthy, his desire
 Is fixed on what he should avoid ; and me,
 The sire of all the evils crowding on him,
 He worships with devotion, ringed around
 With such a train of body guards ; and would suffer 480
 Aught sooner than my loss.

Mer. How smooth thou art,
 And slippery, Plutus ; hard to catch, and hard
 To hold ; affording no sufficient grasp ; like eels
 Or serpents through the fingers, slipping off
 We know not how. While, on the other hand, 485
 Poverty sticks like birdlime, easily caught,
 With many a hook outsticking from all parts
 Of her whole body, so that all who approach
 Are held immediately, and scarce escape.
 But, while we chatter, one thing is forgotten. 490

Plut. What's that ?

Mer. We've not brought with us whom we want
 Most specially — Thesaurus.

Plut. Never mind.
 Going to you, I left him in the ground,
 And bade him stay at home, and ope the door
 To none, unless he heard my voice commanding. 495

SCENE III.—The Desert by Athens.

MERCURY, } descending.
 PLUTUS, }
 POVERTY and Attendants.
 TIMON.

Mer. Let's, therefore, enter Attica. Take care
 To follow me, close holding by my cloak,
 Until we reach the desert.

Plut. Thou doest well
 To guide me on the way ; for shouldst thou leave me,
 Soon in my wanderings I, perhaps, should meet 500
 Some Cleon or Hyperbolus. What noise
 Is this I hear, as if of iron grating
 Against a stone ?

Mer. 'Tis Timon, who hard by

Digs in a mountainous and stony land.

Good Heavens! What? Poverty is here, and Toil, 505
Endurance, Wisdom, Manliness, and a train
Marshalled by Hunger: followers better far
Than are the satellites.

Plut. Why not, Mercury,
Do we not flee this place as speedily
As we can leave it? What, now, can we do 510
Worthy of mention, with a man surrounded
By such a host as this?

Mer. As Jupiter
Thinks otherwise, we must abandon fear.

Pov. Where, Argus-slayer, dost thou thus, blind fellow,
Guide and conduct?

Mer. By Jupiter, to Timon 515
We are despatched.

Pov. Plutus, Timon sent! When I,
Having received him in an evil plight,
From hands of Luxury, have made of him
A man of worth and honor! Am I, then,
I, Poverty, in your eyes so lightly held, 520
And deemed a mark of easy injury,
That thus ye take from me my sole possession,
Carefully wrought to virtue, that again,
Plutus receiving him, shall hand him over
To Insolence and Pride, and rendering him 525
Soft, silly, senseless as before, restore him
Again to me, worn to a worthless rag?

Mer. So, Poverty, hath Jupiter ordained.

Pov. I go, then. Toil, and Wisdom, and the rest,
Follow me. He full soon will find that he, 530
By my abandonment, has lost a good
Partner of labor, and the best of teachers;

With whom conversing, he was strong of mind,
In body healthful, living as a man
Should live, who, looking to himself, considers 535
All superfluities, and vulgar cares,
Unworthy of his notice. [Exeunt POVERTY and Train.]

Mer. They are gone ;

Let us approach him. [They approach.]

Tim. Who are ye, ye scoundrels ?

What motive brings you hither, to annoy
A laborer and a hireling ? But ye shall not 540
Depart rejoicing, villains as ye are,
For I shall pelt you well with clods and stones.

Mer. Nay, pelt not, Timon, for we are not men.
I am Mercury, and this is Plutus, sent
By Jupiter, who listens to thy prayers. 545
So, in the name of fortune, take thy wealth,
Freed from thy labors.

Tim. Still I'll make ye suffer,
Although ye be the gods ye say ye are :
I hate all gods and men. For this blind fellow,
Whoever he may be, I shall break his head, 550
Smiting him with my spade.

Plut. Let us depart
To Jove, O Mercury ; for the man appears
In no small measure mad, and ere I go
May do me mischief.

Mer. Nothing angry, Timon,
But cast aside this harsh and savage mood. 555
Stretch forth both hands, catch at this favoring fortune ;
Be rich once more, and take the highest place
Among the men of Athens ; and despise
All these ungrateful wretches—thou alone
Possessed of happiness.

Tim. I want ye not— 560
 Plague me no more—my spade is wealth sufficient ;
 And as for happiness, the greatest share
 I look for is, that no one may come near me.

Mer. So savage, my good friend : “ And must I bear
To Jove this answer, surly and severe ? ” 565
 Justly art thou a man-hater, for from men
 Much wrong was offered thee ; but no god-hater,
 Seeing the gods take so much care of thee.

Tim. To thee, then, Mercury, and to Jove, my thanks
 Are tendered for that care ; but I refuse 570
 To take this fellow, Plutus.

Mer. Why ?

Tim. Because
 He brought upon me, in my former days,
 Ten thousand evils ; handing me to flatterers,
 Exposing me to knaves, exciting hatred,
 Corrupting me with luxury, rousing envy ; 575
 And on a sudden then abandoning me,
 At last, in style so false and treacherous.
 And then most honest Poverty, with labor
 Of the most manly nature, strung my nerves—
 Made me acquainted with free-spoken speech 580
 And truth—afforded me whatever is needful
 For man who lives by toil—taught me to scorn
 Objects of vulgar care—upon myself
 Made me rely for all the hopes of life—
 And showed me what was mine own wealth indeed : 585
 Which no base flatterer with his glozing tongue,
 No harpy sycophant with threats of law,
 No angry mob, no ballotmongering voter,
 No wily tyrant, can deprive me of.
 So strengthened thus by labor, and this land 590

Industriously am tilling, far away
 From all your city-evils, quite content
 In earning sure, sufficient sustenance,
 By this my spade. Then, Mercury, return
 With hasty foot, and carry back to Jove 595
 This Plutus. As for me, 'twill be enough
 To bid all mankind, old and young, lament.

Mer. No, my good sir, for all are not inclined
 To join in lamentation. Lay aside
 These passionate ravings, only fit for children, 600
 And take the God of Riches ; well advised
 “ That gifts from Jove should never be despised.”

Plut. May I, O Timon, plead my cause against thee ?
 Or will it trouble thee to hear me speak ?

Tim. Speak, then, but briefly, and with no preambles, 605
 Such as the cursed rhetoricians use ;
 For Mercury's sake, I'll hear a short oration.

Plut. I ought in justice speak at length, accused
 As I am by thee of so many wrongs ;
 But see if I have wronged thee as thou sayest— 610
 I who to thee was cause of pleasantest things—
 Honor, precedence, crowns, and luxuries.
 Through me thou wert the mark for every eye,
 The theme of praise, the object of devotion :
 If aught, 'twas thine from flatterers to suffer ; 615
 I must not bear the blame. 'Tis rather I
 Who have been wronged by thee—casting me out
 Disgracefully to those accursed fellows
 Who praised thee, swindled thee, and in all manners
 Laid traps for me. Then, if thou dost complain 620
 That I betrayed thee ; on the contrary, I
 Retort the charge ; I headlong from thy house
 Was driven, and flung in every manner forth ;

Wherefore most noble Poverty has clad thee,
 Instead of a soft robe, with this coarse jerkin ; 625
 And here I call on Mercury to witness
 How I entreated Jupiter not to send me
 To one who erst had treated me so harshly.

Mer. But now thou seest how altered he's become ;
 So, Plutus, cheerfully go dwell with him. 630

[To TIMON.] Dig, Timon,
 Where thou art. [To PLUTUS.] And thou beneath
 His spade place treasure ; when he hears thy voice
 He'll come obedient.

Tim. I must then comply,
 And once again be rich. What can one do
 When by the gods compelled ? But, pray, consider 635
 Into what troubles ye will thereby plunge me.
 Wretch that I am, who leave my happy life,
 And shall receive this sudden heap of gold,
 And such a load of care, doing no wrong.

Mer. Bear with it, Timon, for my sake ; and even 640
 Were it most hard and troublous of endurance,
 It should be borne, that thy base flatterers
 Might burst themselves with envy. I to Heaven
 Shall travel over Ætna. [Exit MERCURY.]

Plut. He has gone,
 As I conjecture from the waving sound 645
 Of wings. Do thou remain. I go to send
 The God of Treasure ; vigorously dig.
 [To THESAURUS.] Treasure of Gold, I call thee to obey
 This Timon, and to place thyself beneath
 His spade. [To TIMON.]* Dig deeper, Timon. I depart. 650
 [Exit PLUTUS.]

• END OF THE SECOND ACT.

* The reader of Lucian will know the difficulties of the passage in the original. We have translated after ἀπαρτησιν, which is now commonly read ;

ACT III.

SCENE II.—The Desert.

TIMON.	DEMEAS.
GNATHONIDES.	THRASYCLES.
PHILIADES.	BLEPSIAS, &c.

Tim. Come, spade, put forth thy strength, and show no sign 651

Of weariness, in calling from the depths
Of earth this lurking treasure into light.

[Digs, and discovers gold.]

O wonder-working Jove ! dear Corybantes !
O Hermes, god of gain ! Whence are these heaps, 655
Those boundless heaps, of gold ?—Perhaps I dream ;
I fear that, on awaking, they may prove
To be no more than cinders. Nay, 'tis gold !
Stamped gold—true gleaming color, heavy weight, 660
Of aspect most delicious to the eye.

*O gold ! **

What fairer sight can man behold ?

but ὑπιστησθαι is the oldest reading. There are, however, obvious objections to putting it into the mouth of Plutus. It can not be forced to signify, "I will depart;" and it is contrary to the allegory that Plutus should be under either Thesaurus or Timon, particularly the former. Might we not give it to Thesaurus ?

Plutus. Treasure of Gold, I call thee to obey
This Timon, and to place thee 'neath his spade.

Thesaurus [from below]. Timon, dig deep. I shall be under ye.
i. e. under Plutus and Timon.—W. M.

* The first part of this passage is, in the original, a line from a lost play of Euripides, Bellerophon, quoted by Stobæus :—

Ὡ χρυσὲ δαξίωμα κάλλιστον βροτοῖς.

The whole extract may be thus translated :—

O, gold ! the fairest gift to human kind,
Compared with thee the joys that mothers feel,
Or fathers, in their offspring, can't compare

*Still beaming forth in beauty bright,
Like blazing fire by day and night.*

O gold !

665

Come, dearest, most beloved ! Show me the maid
Who would not, with wide-opening arms embrace
So sweet a lover, showering through the tiles ?

Midas, and Cræsus, and thou Delphic fane,

Loaded with offerings, how you seem as naught

670

Compared to Timon, and the wealth of Timon,

With whom not Persia's monarch can compare !

Good spade, dear jerkin, it is meet that I

Should hang you here as votive gifts to Pan.

I'll purchase all this desert, and erect

675

A turret o'er the treasure, just enough

For me to spend my days in, and to serve

As tomb, my bones to shelter when I am dead.

With those which they experience in whose houses
Thou art the guest. If to admiring eyes
Venus displays as brilliant charms as thine,
It is no wonder that so many lovers
Should follow in her train.

A preceding line of this passage, also preserved by Stobæus :—

Ἔα με κερδαίνοντα κεκλησθαι κακόν—

Let me be rich, and men may call me scoundrel—

exposed the tragedy to no small peril. The audience, as Seneca informs us, rose en masse to drive the actor and the play off the stage. Euripides was obliged to come forward and request that they would wait until the end, when it would be seen what was the sad fate of the speaker of such sentiments, in the end of the play. This is something like Lord Byron's apology for Don Juan.

The latter part is adapted from Pindar, Ol. i.

ἡ ἔ
χρυσὸς αἰθόμενον πῦρ
ἄτε διαπρέπει νύτ—
κτι—

Lucian adds, καὶ μεθ' ἡμέραν. Cary's translation is brief enough :—

“Gold like fire at midnight blazing,
Glittering heaps outshineth far.

BE THIS DECREED,* and laid down as a law,
 For my remaining life, never to mix 680
 With mankind ; none to know, and all to scorn.
 Be friend, companion, guest, appeals to the altar
 Of pity, idle trash. Sorrow for tears,
 Or help to him who needs it, flat subversion
 Of ordinance, and upsetting of all morals. 685
 Lonely as lives the wolf, so shall I live.
 One friend, no more, I'll have, and he is—Timon.
 All other men are enemies and traitors.
 If I should meet a man, it is a case
 Demanding purification ; and the day 690
 On which I barely see one is accursed.
 Be they to me no more than merely statues
 Of brass or stone. No herald I'll receive,
 And make no treaty. Let the desert wild
 Serve as a boundary betwixt me and man. 695
 The names of fellow-tribesman, fellow-wardsman,
 Or fellow-citizen, the name itself

* How feeble is the Misanthrope of Lucian to the same man in Shakespeare ! The prayers of the Greek are humanity itself to what we find in the English tragedy :—

“ Son of sixteen,
 Pluck the lined crutch from the old limping sire ;
 With it beat out his brains. Piety and fear,
 Religion to the gods, peace, justice, truth,
 Domestic awe, night-rest, and neighborhood,
 Instruction, manners, mysteries, and trades,
 Degrees, observances, customs, and laws,
 Decline to your confounding contraries,
 And yet confusion live !” &c.

The views of Lucian were far more limited than those of Shakespeare. The misanthrope of him who grasped the universe in his vision imprecated curses on all mankind. The clever wit and rhetorician of Athens could not resist the opportunity of making his Timon a vehicle for jest and satire against the orators and philosophers of the coteries in which he mingled, and whose sayings and doings seemed to him of such infinite importance.—W. M.

Of country, are but cold and barren words,
 The objects of vain glory to an idiot.
 Be Timon, and he only rich, and hold 700
 All others in contempt, and by himself
 Indulge in joy free from the flattering crowd,
 And their o'erburthening praise. His sacrifice
 To the great gods will he perform alone,
 And at the board feasting alone will sit, 705
 Himself his only neighbor, all the rest
 Shaken away. And further be it decreed
 That when the hour of death draws near, he only
 Shall clasp his dying hand, and on his head
 Place the last chaplet. He assumes the title 710
 Most grateful to his ears—of Misanthrope!
 The manners suitable to such a name—
 Harshness, and fierceness, incivility,
 Anger, and hate of mankind, shall be his.
 If I behold one perishing in the fire, 715
 And praying me to quench it, be it quenched
 With pitch and oil: or if the winter flood
 Hurries a drowning wretch along its current,
 And with uplifted hand he cries for aid,
 Headlong I'll plunge him, so that by no chance 720
 He may escape! Thus shall I fitly pay them.
 Timon, the son of Echeeratides,
 A burgher of Colyttos, introduced
 This law to the assembly. The same Timon
 Put it to vote, and passed it, and he will 725
 Right manfully and well carry out th' enactment;
 Yet would I give a handsome price that all Should know my wealth enormous. It would be
 As bad as choking to them. Why! what's this?
 Heavens! what a bustle; from all sides they run, 730

Covered with dust, and panting in the course,
 Having, I know not how, smelt out the gold.
 Shall I, then, mount this rock, and drive them off—
 Pelted away with stones? or for this once
 Do violence to my law, and meet them that 735
 They may feel keener insult from my scorn.
 Ay! that is better. Let me therefore stay
 To greet them. Who comes first? Gnathonides,
 My flatterer, who, when late I asked a dole,
 Handed me forth a halter. At my house 740
 Oft had his stomach heaved beneath the load
 Of gallons of my wine. But he is right
 To come; for he shall be the first to howl.

Enter GNATHONIDES.

Gnathonides. Did I not say the gods would ne'er forget
 So good a man as Timon? Timon, hail! 745
 All hail! thou handsomest, and pleasantest man,
 And most convivial fellow.

Tim. Hail thou, too,
 Gnathonides, most ravenous of vultures,
 And most confounded scoundrel of mankind! 750

Gnath. Fond of a joke as ever. Where is the feast?
 To cheer the cup, I bring with me a song
 From the new dithyrambs I late was taught.

Tim. Taught by this spade thou'lt sing forth doleful ditties
 In elegiac! [Beats him.] 755

Gnath. Ha! what's this? Dost strike me?
 Bear witness, Hercules. Oh! oh! I cite thee
 Before the Areopagus, on a charge
 Of battery and bloodshed.

Tim. Wait much longer, 760
 And I shall give thee cause for a charge of murder.

Gnath. No, not at all; thou hast it in thy power Wholly to cure the wound, by laying on
An ointment of thy gold. There's no such stiptic.

Tim. What, loitering still?

Gnath. Nay, I depart, but thou 765
Shalt have no cause of joy for this thy change
From kindness to barbarity. [Exit.

Tim. Who is this?
This bald head fellow? Oh! Philiades,
Most flatulent of flatterers. From my hands 770
He got a freehold farm, and for his daughter
Two talents as her dowry—a reward
Bestowed him for his lavish compliments
Upon my singing; for when all the rest
Held silence, he alone, with many an oath, 775
Swore that I sang more sweetly than the swans;
And, but the other day, when I in sickness
Came to him begging succor, the good fellow
Threatened me with the whip.

Enter PHILIADES.

Philiades. O! impudence! 780
Now, do you know who Timon is—is now
Gnathonides, his friend and fellow-reveller,
The ungrateful knave, by all whom former favors
Were unremembered, meets his due deserts.
But I, his ancient friend, who with him shared 785
The days of youth, a fellow of his tribe,
And brother citizen, approach discreetly,
Not wishing to intrude. All hail, my patron!
And still keep off these rascal parasites—
Mere trencher friends, no better than the crow. 790
We can trust no one now—for all are base

And thankless. As for me, I hither came
 To offer thee a talent to supply
 Thy present needs; when on the road I learnt
 That an o'erflowing mint of wealth was thine. 795
 I now have come to counsel thee, although Thou art too wise to lack advice of mine,
 Who might at need be counsellor to Nestor.

Tim. So be't, Philiadès. Come hither, then,
 And take this cheery welcome from my spade. 800
[Strikes him.]

Phil. Good people, see, the ungrateful man has broken
 My head because I wished to teach him prudence. [Exit.]

Tim. Here comes a third. 'Tis orator Demeas,
 With his decree in hand, and laying claim
 To be my cousin. In one day for him 805
 I paid up sixteen talents to the city
 (He had been cast, and lay in a prison for it,
 Having no means to pay the sum, till I,
 From pity, freed him); and when, not long since,
 It was his lot to share some public money 810
 For the Ægeïd tribe, and I applied,
 Asking my portion of't, he told me plump,
 He did not know me as a citizen.

Enter DEMEAS.

Demeas. Hail, Timon, glory of thy race—thou prop
 Of Athens, and thou bulwark of all Greece, 815
 Long since the assembled people and both councils—
 Senate and Areopagus—await thee.
 But listen, first, to the decree which I
 Have for thine honor thus drawn up: “WHEREAS,
Timon, the son of Echekratides, 820
A burgher of Colyttos, much renowned

*For goodness and for virtue, and in wisdom
 Surpassing all the other men of Greece,
 Has many a noble benefit conferred
 Upon the city throughout all his life —* 825
*Has, in one day, in boxing, wrestling, running,
 In two-horse driving, and in four-in-hand,
 Been proclaimed victor at the Olympic games."*

Tim. I never even visited the games.

Dem. What then ? some other time thou wilt be there ; 830
 ('Tis best to put in such like things as these).

" And last year bravely, by Acharnæ, two Spartan battalions into pieces cut."

Tim. Why, how is this ? I never carried arms,
 Nor was included in the muster-roll. 835

Dem. This is mere modesty. But we should be Ungrateful, did we not remember it.

*" By drawing up decrees, by giving counsel,
 By leading armies, hath he to the city
 In no small wise contributed. For these reasons,* 840

*BE IT DECREED by senate, and by people,
 By the high court justiciary, by the tribes,
 And by the wards, severally and generally,
 There be erected in the citadel,*

And nigh Minerva placed, a golden Timon, 845

*With lightnings in his right hand, and with rays
 Beaming about his head ; that he be crowned
 With seven gold crowns, and that they be proclaimed
 When at the Dionysia the new tragedies
 Shall be to-day performed (to do him honor,* 850
The Dionysia must be held to-day).

*DEMEAS THE ORATOR proposed this bill,
 Nearest to him of kin, and his disciple ;
 For Timon is a famous orator.*

And all things else whatever he desires." 855

Such, then, is the decree. I had intended
To bring with me my son, whom, after thee,
I gave the name of Timon.

Tim. How is this?

As far as I know, thou wert never married.

Dem. Next year I will, if God may so permit, 860
And shall have offspring; and the child so born
(Twill be a son, of course), I call him Timon.

Tim. I doubt if thou wilt marry, my good fellow,
After so stiff a blow as this from me. [Strikes him.]

Dem. Oh, oh! What mean'st thou? At the tyranny 865
Art aiming, Timon, thus to strike the free?
Thou, not a freeman pure—no, not a citizen!
But thou shalt suffer for thy various crimes;
Among the rest, for burning of the citadel.

Tim. It is not burnt, thou scoundrel; which will prove thee 870

A perjured common informer.

Dem. And thy riches

Are made by undermining the Exchequer.

Tim. It is not undermined—that lie wont serve.

Dem. It will be undermined some other day;
But thou hast now all that it once contained. 875

Tim. Take then another. [Strikes him.]

Dem. Wo is me, my back!

Tim. Make no more noise, or I shall give a third.
It will be most ridiculous withal

If I, who two battalions of Laconia,
Unarmed, cut to pieces, could not crush 880

One wretched mannikin: it, indeed, were vain

That at the Olympic games I had been victor

In boxing and in wrestling! [Exit DEMEAS.]

Who is next?

Philosopher Thrasycles! — ay, no one else —
 With beard let loose, and cyebrows all upturned, 885
 His hair set back upon his forehead — waddling
 And grunting, here he comes, a very Boreas,
 Or Triton, such as Zeuxis used to paint.
 Smooth of attire, demure in his deportment,
 And modest in his gait, in morning hours 890
 He preaches upon virtue, and inveighs
 'Gainst pleasure's votaries, and with much laud
 Extols frugality; but when the bath
 Is over, and to supper he proceeds,
 And from the boy takes a prodigious cup 895
 (No watered wine for him, but the neat fluid),
 Then, as if Lethæ's waters he had swallowed,
 He shows in practice the flat contrary
 To all the morning theories — like a kite,
 Pouncing upon the dishes, elbowing 900
 His neighbor guests, filling his beard with sauce,
 Snapping his food like a dog, close bending over
 The plates, as if to find in them that virtue
 He so much talked of; and with careful finger
 Wiping each platter, so as not to leave 905
 One toothful of the garlic sauce behind.
 Then loud are his complaints, if not to him
 Exclusively is given the pie entire,
 The pig, or whatsoever else may be
 The tit-bit chosen for gourmand or for glutton. 910
 Tipsy at last, or drunken, he proceeds,
 Not merely to the pitch of song or dance,
 But of abuse and riot. Many a discourse
 Over the cup he holds; and his chief themes
 Are order and sobriety, which he treats 915

With tongue absurdly stammering, quite knocked up
 By the strong wine he swallowed ; till no more
 His stomach will retain the dose, and then
 Away they carry him staggering from the chamber,
 Claspings a singing girl in both his arms. 920
 But even in sober hours, he need not yield
 To any man precedence in the arts
 Of impudence, rapacity, or lying.
 'Mong flatterers, too, he holds distinguished place,
 And scruples not at perjury. Before him 925
 Marches Imposture ; Impudence attends him ;
 In short, the thing's most feelosophical,*
 Complete in every part, and wholly accomplished
 In manifold perfections. Ere long, therefore,
 So fine a fellow well deserves to howl. 930

Enter THRASYCLES.

What's this ? Good Heavens ! Why loitered Thrasycles ?

Thra. I come not hither, Timon, with the motive
 That sways the multitude, who, all agape,
 Run in a crowd after thy wealth, thy plate,
 Thy gold, thy costly banquets, holding forth 935
 In many a glozing flattery to a man
 Simple as thou, and liberal of hand.
 Thou know'st for me a biscuit is enough,
 Seasoned, as sweetest luxury, with a cress,
 An onion, or, perchance should I indulge, 940
 A little salt. The well supplies my drink.
 This tattered cloak I deem of higher worth
 Than finest purple. As for gold, to me
 It seems no better than the sea-side shells.
 'Tis on thine own account I come, through fear, 945

* Πάνσοφον τὸ χρῆμα.—W. M.

Lest that most pestilent and treacherous thing,
 Wealth, which to many a man, at many a time,
 Has been the cause of woes incurable,
 Should spoil thy better nature. Wouldst thou take
 The advice I proffer, thou wouldst cast it all 950
 Into the sea, as something quite unneeded,
 By a good man, whose eyes have power to see
 The riches of philosophy. But, my friend,
 Don't fling it in the deep sea altogether.
 If as thou wadest on the shelving shore, 955
 The water reach thy hips, 'twill be sufficient;
 I should alone be witness. But if this Appear not suitable, another mode
 Perhaps is better to get rid of it
 Out of thine house at once, not leaving there 960
 A single obolus; give it all away
 To those who are in want—to one, five drachms;
 Elsewhere, a mina; elsewhere, half a talent;
 If a philosopher apply, 'tis just
 That his should be a double or treble portion. 965
 As for my part, I ask not for myself;
 But that I might assist my friends in want,
 I shall be satisfied if thou shouldst fill
 The wallet which I carry; it contains
 Not quite two bushels of our Attic measure; 970
 For a philosopher should be content
 And moderate, and never let his thoughts
 Wander beyond his wallet.

Tim.

Thrasycles,

I much commend thee; but, with thy good leave,
 I shall not fill thy wallet, but thy head, 975
 And that with bumps, measured out with my spade.

[Strikes him.]

Thra. O commonwealth ! O laws ! See how we are beaten,
In our free state, by this accursed fellow.

Tim. Do not be angry, worthy Thrasycles.
Have I defrauded thee ? Nay, I am ready 980
To throw in four additional pints beside,
Beyond the measure. [Exit THRASYCLES.

What is here ? A crowd
Comes up together : Blepsias, Laches, Gniphos,
A whole battalion, destined for the howling.

Enter BLEPSIAS, &c.

I must ascend the rock, and give a respite 985
To my well-labored spade, and gathering up
A store of stones, hurl them like hail upon them.

Blepsias. Timon, don't throw ; we are departing.

Tim. But
You part not from me bloodless and unwounded. 989

II.

Charon; or, The Lookers-on.*

THIS dramatic sketch—[“Prior pars dialogi etiam δραματικῇ est,” says Petrus Mosellanus in his Argumentum, he might have extended the description to all parts]—is a sort of prototype of the Diable Boiteux; of which, however, the Cobbler and the Cock is the direct original. It bears a resemblance, also, to a much graver work—the Paradise Regained. Satan there takes our Saviour to a mountain to behold the kingdoms of the earth, and all their glory. Among other things, he is shown the eastern kingdoms, at the time when

“The Parthian king
In Ctesiphon hath gathered all his host
Against the Scythian, whose incursions wild
Have wasted Sogdiana; to her aid
He marches now in haste,” &c.

Par. Reg. book iii. pp. 299–303.

On which Dunster remarks, “In the Charon, or ΕΠΙΣΚΟΠΟΥΝΤΕΣ of Lucian, Mercury, in a similar manner, shows and describes to Charon, Cyrus marching on his expedition against Croesus.” Having explained who Cyrus is, and having related his former conquests, he says, καὶ ΝΥΝ ελασειοντι ἐπὶ Λυδῖαν εοικεν, ὡς καθελῶν τὸν Κροισον ἀρχοι

* From Fraser's Magazine for June, 1839.—M.

απαντων. c. 9. This dialogue of Lucian is not without its resemblance, in other respects, to this part of our author's poem. Mercury, to gratify Charon in a short time with a full view of what is passing in the world, tells him that he must devise "a specular mount" on purpose—την ικανην ΣΚΟΠΗΝ. This he does by piling Pelion on Ossa, and Cæta and Parnassus on these. He then shows his friend an "outstretched prospect" of land and water, *γην πολλην * * * * καὶ ὀρη, καὶ ποταμους*. Charon afterward desires to see Nineveh, Babylon, and other famous cities of antiquity. The first of those, Mercury tells him, has been so completely destroyed, that no traces of it remain. The second he shows, and it may be remarked, describes it ευπυργος, and τον μεγαν περιβολον [εχουσα], which is very similar to our poets, "Huge cities and high towered." Ver. 261, supra, i. e. in P. R. The passage in Lucian to which Dunster refers is translated below, v. 592-603.

Charon; or, The Lookers-on.

SCENE I.

MERCURY meeting CHARON emerging, near Olympus, from the infernal regions.*

Mercury. Why art thou laughing, Charon? on what errand
Hast thou come hither to the light of day,
Leaving thy bark? It little is thy wont
To intermeddle with affairs above.

Charon. I wished, O Mercury, to see the course 5
Of things in life, and what men do in it;
And what it is they lose when it departs
That sends them groaning to the nether world;
For no man sails across unwet with tears.
I therefore begged from Pluto that I might, 10
Like that Thessalian lad; ascend to earth,
Leaving my boat deserted for a day.
And by good luck methinks I've met with thee;
For I am sure that thou wilt lead me round,
Guiding my stranger steps, and pointing out 15
All that I seek to know.

Mer. Good ferryman,
I have no leisure; for, upon the bidding
Of the supernal Jupiter, I go,
Bent on a message relative to men.
And he is quick of temper; and I fear 20

* See v. 92, 93.—W. M.

That if I loiter on my task, he may
 Make me yours altogether—to the realms
 Of darkness banished; or, as late he did
 To Vulcan, seize me also by the foot,
 And from the heavenly threshold fling me sheer; 25
 So that I, too, as limping cupbearer,
 Should be a mark for laughter.

Cha.

Wilt thou, then,

Neglect me thus wandering in vain on earth,
 Thine old companion, and thy brother-sailor;
 Thy colleague in the transport service? * Nay, 30
 Offspring of Maia, better 'twould become thee
 To call to memory that I ne'er required
 Thine aid to pump, or pull an oar with me.
 Stretched on the thwarts, thou, a broad-shouldered fellow,
 Snored at thine ease; or if among the passengers 35
 We had some prating ghost, chattered with him
 Through all the voyage, leaving it to me,
 Old as I am, to pull a pair of oars,
 Rowing alone. But, for thy father's sake,
 Dear little Mercury, don't leave me here; 40
 But take me round, and show me every thing
 The living world contains, that so I may See something ere I travel back again.
 If thou shouldst thus abandon me, in nothing
 Would I excel the blind, who in the dark 45
 Stumble and slip, as, on the contrary,
 The daylight makes me blink. So grant this favor,
 Cyllenius, which for ever shall I store
 In grateful memory.

* Συνοδίατροπος. Hemsterhuys interprets the word διάκτορος, as "messenger;" but that can hardly apply here. It must signify a "conductor," viz., of the dead; one employed διείγων τὰς ψυχάς.—W. M.

Mer. This affair, methinks,
 Will be a case of beating ; I foresee 50
 This tour will bring me a reward of bumps ;
 But I comply. When a friend urges so,
 What other can I do ? But, ferryman,
 As for an accurate view of every thing,
 'Tis quite impossible ; it would require 55
 A stay of many years, and I should be Proclaimed in hue-and-cry a runaway
 From Jupiter ; and thou the tasks of death
 Should leave undone, not ferrying o'er the shades
 For such a length of time, defrauding so 60
 Pluto's exchequer, to the discontent
 Of Æacus, his chancellor, who would miss
 The customary penny. We must think
 How I can point thee out the chiefest matters.

Cha. Be't thine, good Mercury, to plan what's best ; 65
 For I know nothing of the things on earth,
 Being but a stranger.

Mer. Charon, then, in brief,
 We want some lofty place, whence every thing
 Could be discerned. If it were possible
 For thee to mount to Heaven, the thing were easy ; 70
 For from that pinnacle thou all the world
 Could in its circuit accurately view.
 But since it is not consonant that thou,
 Habitual dweller with the shadowy dead,
 Should mount into the regal domes of Jove, 75
 We must seek out some lofty mountain.

Cha. Mercury,
 Thou knowest what I was wont to say to thee
 When we have sailed together. If the wind
 Should strike the sail athwart ; or when the wave

Was boisterous, and ran billows, ye would then, 80
 Out of your ignorance of sea affairs,
 Bid me take in the sail, or slack the sheet,
 Or run before the wind; then would I bid ye
 Keep your tongues quiet, for I best could judge.
 Take the same course thyself, and do whate'er 85
 Seems to thee right, as thou art now the helmsman;
 While I, as passengers should do, will sit
 In silence, all obedience to thine orders.

Mer. Thou sayst right; I know what should be done:
 I'll find a proper spot for observation. 90
 [To himself.] Is Caucasus fit? or is Parnassus higher?
 Or this Olympus here surpassing both?—
 Ay! and Olympus brings into my head
 A notion not to be despised. But thou [To CHARON]
 Must take thy share of toil, and help my labor. 95

Cha. Command. I'll help thee to my utmost power.

Mer. Homer, the poet, tells us that the sons
 Of Aloëus—two, as we, in number—
 Being but mere boys, tore Ossa from its roots,
 And piled it on Olympus; and upon it 100
 Planted Mount Pelion; thereby, as they thought,
 Making a ladder to ascend the Heavens.
 These impious youths with fitting punishment
 Were chastened. Can not we, who mean no harm
 Against the gods, build up a similar pile; 105
 Rolling up mountain upon mountain, so
 To have from loftier spot a clearer view?

Cha. And can we, Mercury, being only two,
 Lift Pelion upon Ossa?

Mer. Why not, Charon?
 What! are we weaker than a pair of brats— 110
 Both of us gods?

Cha. No; but the thing appears
Somewhat incredible—a swelling vaunt
Of power exaggerated.*

Mer. Ay! like enough
Thou art plain commonplace, and not at all
Versant in poesy. But noble Homer 115
Made in two lines Heaven scalable, with ease,
Bringing the hills together. And I marvel
That this should seem so wonderful to thee,
Who know'st that Atlas, merely singlehanded,†
Alone upholds the globe, carrying us all. 120
And thou hast heard, perhaps, how Hercules,
My brother, once relieved this very Atlas
A short time from the weight, slipping himself
Beneath the burden.

Cha. Yes, I heard of it;
But thou, good Mercury, and the bards must know 125
If all these tales are true.

Mer. Most true, O Charon!
On what account should men so wise as they Tell falsehoods? Let us, then, with levers lift
First Ossa, as the master-builder, Homer,
Does in his verse direct us. 130

“On Ossa, Pelion rustling with its leaves.”

[They place Pelion on Ossa.]

Look! how at once with ease and poetry
We have our work effected! I shall mount
And see, if 'twill suffice, or if there be Need of a further piling. Whew! we're yet 135

* Τὸ πρᾶγμα δοκεῖ μοι ἀπίθανον τινὰ τὴν μεγαλοουργίαν ἔχειν. Translated by Petr. Mosellanus, “Res ipsa incredibilem quandam magnifici operis ostentationem continere videtur.”—W. M.

† In some editions, εἰς ὧμων; but εἰς ὧν is necessary for the contrast here intended.—W. M.

Down at the root and bottom of the sky.
 For to the east Ionia scarce and Lydia
 Appear in sight; and to the west not more
 Than Italy and Sicily: on the north
 Only the lands about the Danube. Down 140
 Southward I see but Crete, and that not clear.
 We must, it seems, move Cæta also, Charon,
 And than Parnassus over all.

Cha. Let's do so;
 But pray take care we do not make our work
 Too slender, lengthening it beyond proportion; 145
 For if it topple down, we shall experience
 The bitterness of Homer's architecture
 Fracturing our skulls.

Mer. Take courage; all is safe.
 Bring hither Cæta; roll me up Parnassus.

[Piles the mountains.]

I mount once more. All's right, for the whole world 150
 Can now be seen. Come, ferryman, climb up.

Cha. Give me thy hand, for, Mercury, thou makest me
 Ascend no petty structure.

Mer. If thou wilt
 See the world, Charon, thou must not expect
 To shun all danger, and indulge at once 155
 Thy curious disposition. Hold me by
 The right hand, and take care thou dost not step
 Upon a slippery spot. Well done! Thou also Hast gained the summit; and, as Mount Parnassus
 Is double-topped, we each can choose a peak; 160
 And, seated there, we now on all things round
 May cast our eyes, and pass them in review.

SCENE II.

Summit of Parnassus. MERCURY on one peak. CHARON on the other.

Cha. I see much land outspread, and a large lake
Flowing around it; mountains, too, and rivers,
Than Pyriphlegethon or Cocytus wider; 165
And men of petty stature, and their dens.

Mer. What seem to thee their dens, in fact, are cities.

Cha. Knowest thou, O Mercury, our labor's lost?
It is in vain we have disturbed Parnassus,
It's Castaly, and Ceta.

Mer. How is this? 170

Cha. Naught can I see distinctly from this height;
I wished to see not merely town and mountains,
As in a map, but men themselves, and what
They say and do; just as when first you met me,
And asked me why I laughed. A thing I heard 175
Had tickled me extremely.

Mer. What was that?

Cha. A man invited by some friend to supper,
I fancy, for to-morrow, in reply
Said, "I shall surely come;"* and, as he spoke,
A tile fell tumbling, moved I know not how, 180
Off of a roof and killed him. So I laughed
To find him break his promise. Let's get down,
That I may see and hear what's going on.

Mer. Keep quiet: I shall remedy thy need;
And, in a twinkling, make thee sharp of sight. 185
And for this purpose, also, I shall take

* The words spoken by the invited guest are merely "μάλιστα ἤξω;" ἐς τὴν ὑστεραίαν should not be united with them as in many editions, but with κληθεὶς.
"A man invited by a friend for to-morrow, to supper I suppose, replied: I'll come by all means."—W. M.

My charm from Homer. When I speak the verses,
Thou must no longer blink with eye bedimmed,
But see all plainly.

Cha. Then pronounce the words.

Mer. "*I purge the mist once spread before thine eye, 190
That gods and men thou clearly mayest descry."

Cha. What's this?

Mer. Thou now canst see?

Cha. Most wonderfully!

Lynceus himself was blind compared to me.
Now come, commence the lecture, answering
Whatever I inquire. But dost thou wish 195
My questions should be put in Homer's style,
To show I am not ignorant of Homer?

Mer. What couldest thou know of him, who all thy life
Hast been a sailor, tugging at the oar?

Cha. Look you! I stand no insults on the craft. 200
After his death I ferried him across;
And of the verses that he spouted forth,
Some I can still remember. As it happened,
No trifling tempest caught us; and he straight
Commenced a chant, that sounded not delightful 205
To those who then were sailing; for he sang
How Neptune, gathering the clouds, disturbed
The deep, and, with his trident for a ladle,
Stirred up the sea, arousing all his tempests.†
But as the song proceeded, on a sudden 210
There came a darkening squall, which had well-nigh

* Hom. Il. ε. 127.—W. M.

† The text in the ordinary editions needs transposition. The words, κυκῶν τὴν θάλασσαν, must apply to the action of Neptune in stirring the sea, and not at all to Homer, whose verses could not have had the effect of occasioning the storm on the Styx. We have transposed them; and ἐπὶ τῶν ἐπῶν must connect with ἐμπροσθεν.—W. M.

Upset the boat. It made the poet sea-sick;
And he threw up a flood of rhapsodies,
Of Scylla, and Charybdis, and the Cyclops.

Mer. It was not hard from such a copious vomit, 215
To save some verses.

Cha. Wilt thou, then, inform me,
“*Who is that thick and brawny wight, of wondrous strength and size,

Who doth above his brother men by head and shoulders rise?”

Mer. Milo, of Croton he, the wrestler, whom
The Greeks are now saluting with applause 220
For lifting up a bull, and carrying it
Through the mid stadium.

Cha. With much greater justice
Should they applaud me, Mercury, who ere long
Will lift, and carry to my little skiff,
Milo himself, when he comes down to us, 225
Thrown in a wrestling-match by Death, that most Unconquered of antagonists, not knowing
How he was laid by the heels. He then will groan,
Calling to mind his crowns, and these loud plaudits.
But now, while proud of heart, and mark of wonder 230
For bearing off the bull, can we suppose
That he imagines he shall ever die?

Mer. How can he think of death at such a time,
In his full flower of strength?

Cha. Let him alone;
He shall afford us soon a hearty laugh. 235
When, in my boat, he shall have strength no longer,
Even to lift a gnat, much less a bull.
Now turn we to another. Who is he,

* Hom. Il. v. 226. Parodying 'Αχαιῖς by πύχιστος.—W. M.

[Cha. Sons of the Argive priestess, those who lately
At the one moment died, after they had drawn
Their mother in her chariot to the temple.]

Cræs. "So be it : let them hold the foremost place 265
Of happiness. Whom settest thou in the second ?

Sol. The Athenian Tellus ; excellent in life,
And dying for his country.

Cræs. Why, thou wretch !
Dost thou not count me happy ?

Sol. Not until
Thy final day has come can I decide 270
That question, Cræsus : for the certain test
Of human things is death, and to have lived
Happily to the last."

[Cha. Well answered, Solon —
We do not scape thy memory — the boat
By thee is deemed criterion best of life ! 275
But who are those whom Cræsus sends away !
What bear they on their shoulders ?

Mer. Golden ingots,
Intended for the Pythian, as the price
Of oracles by which he soon will be Lost like his gold. The man is prophet-mad. 280

Cha. Is that, then, gold — that shining thing, that glistens —

Of yellow color, with a reddish tinge ?

Mer. Yes, Charon, that is gold ; the object of
So many battles, and so many songs.*

Char. And yet I do not see what use it serves 285
Save to oppress the bearers with its weight.

* Τὸ αἰδοῦμον ὄνομα, καὶ περιμάχητον. The αἰδοῦμον probably refers to the praises bestowed on gold in the first lines of the first Olympic of Pindar ; ὄνομα seems to be an interpolation.—W. M.

Mer. Thou knowest not, then, what wars that metal breeds
What treasons, perjuries, murders, robberies,
Prisons, long voyages, slavery, and traffic.

Cha. For that which differs scarce at all from brass ! 290
With brass I am acquainted, as thou know'st,
Taking an obolus from those I ferry.

Mer. But brass is plenty, therefore not much valued,
And miners dig of this but scanty portions
Out of the depths of each — for from the earth 295
It comes, like lead, or any other metal.

Cha. Strange human folly, to admire with love
So passionate this heavy, yellow thing !

Mer. But Solon, there, does not appear to love it,
As thou perceivest, for he laughs at Cræsus, 300
And all the pompous airs of the barbarian.
But now, methinks, the Athenian means to speak :
Let's listen, therefore.]

Sol. " Tell me, Cræsus, think'st thou
The Pythian wants thine ingots ?

Cræs. Yes, by Jove !
In Delphi is there no such offering. 305

Sol. Thou thinkest, therefore, that the god will be
By thee made happier, if 'mid other stores,
He numbers golden ingots ?

Cræs. And why not ?

Sol. Thou tellest me of much poverty in Heaven,
If the gods, Cræsus, when they wish for gold, 310
Must send for it from Lydia.

Cræs. Whence elsewhere
Can so much gold be found as is with us ?

Sol. Answer me this in turn. Is iron found
In Lydia ?

Cræs. Not in general.

Sol. Then ye want
The better metal.

Cræs. How? Is iron better 315
Than gold?

Sol. If thou wilt answer without anger,
I'll teach thee.

Cræs. Then interrogate me, Solon.

Sol. Which are the better, they who save, or they
Who are by others saved?

Cræs. The saviours, doubtless.

Sol. Well, then, if, some tell us, Cyrus falls 320
Upon the Lydians, wilt thou then provide
Thy troops with swords of gold; or wilt thou need
The help of iron?

Cræs. Of iron, doubtlessly.

Sol. If that be not provided, then thy gold
Will go to Persia captive.

Cræs. Speak not words 325
Of evil omen.

Sol. May the gods forbid
Such things to happen; but thou art convicted
Of owning iron nobler far than gold.

Cræs. Dost thou then order that I should recall
The golden ingots I have sent the god, 330
And send him iron instead?

Sol. He wants them not—
Iron, or brass, or gold. Whate'er thou offerest
Will be a booty, and a spoil for others,
From Phocis, or Bœotia, ay, or Delphi;
Or for some tyrant-robber; but the god 335
Cares nothing for thy gold-artificers." [Sardis vanishes.

Mer. The Lydian, Charon, can not bear this truth
And liberty of speech. It seems to him

A matter passing strange to hear plain facts
 Spoken by a poor man freely without dread ; 340
 But, before long, he will remember Solon,
 When he must needs ascend the funeral-pile
 Captive to Cyrus. For I lately heard
 Clotho herself reading the several fates
 Destined to men, in which these things are written — 345
 That Cræsus should be captive unto Cyrus ;
 And that the conqueror, Cyrus, should be slain
 By her of Massagetia. Seest thou not
 That Scythian woman on a white horse mounted ?

Cha. I do, by Jove.

Mer. Her name is Tomyris ; 350
 With her own hand doomed to lop Cyrus' head,
 And then to cast it in a bag of blood.
 Thou seest the son of Cyrus, too, a youth ?
 He is Cambyzes. On his father's death
 He will be monarch, and a thousand blunders 355
 Commit in Lybia and in Æthiop-land ;
 And, at the last, with madness seized will die,
 After destroying Apis.

Cha. Store of laughter !
 But now we scarcely dare to look on them,
 With haughty scorn regarding all the world : 360
 Who can believe that in a little time
 One shall be captive, and the other's head
 Laid in a bag of blood ?

SCENE IV.

CHARON and MERCURY on Parnassus surveying the earth.

Cha. (looking toward Samos). But who is he clad in a purple robe ;
 He with the diadem, to whom the cook 365

Offers a ring found in a cut-up fish ?

"In sea-girt isle, he boasts to be a king."

Mer. Well imitated, Charon ! Thou beholdest

Polycrates, the Samian tyrant, who

Thinks he enjoys the height of happiness. 370

And yet he, too, betrayed by his domestic,

There standing by, Mæandrius, to the satrap,

Orætes, shall be crucified. Poor wretch !

All in a moment falling from his bliss.

This, too, I lately heard from Clotho.

Cha.

Bravely, 375

Good Clotho ! place them on the blazing pile ;*

Nail them to crosses, and lop off their heads,

That they may know that they are men. So far

Uplift them, as to make their fall more terrible ;

And I shall laugh when recognising each, 380

I see him naked in my ferry-boat,

Shorn of the purple robe, and golden throne,

And proud tiara !

Mer. Such the fate of these.

But, Charon, look upon yon multitude :

Sailing or fighting, pleading in the courts, 385

Tilling the land, or taking usances,

Or begging.

Cha. I behold a motley crowd,

* In the received text, εἴ γε, ὃ Κλωθοῖ, γεννικῶς καὶ αὐτοῖς, ὃ βελτίστη, καὶ τὰς κεφαλὰς ἀπότημε, καὶ ἀνασκοδόπιζε. The ordinary construction of καὶ αὐτοῖς καὶ τὰς κεφαλὰς ἀπότημε — cut off themselves and their heads — is not tolerable in any language, much less in Greek. Read, by a slight change, καίε αὐποῖς — burn them — cut off their heads. Of the three examples of the mutability of fortune here shown to Charon, one, Cræsus, was destined to the pile — Charon, not being in the secrets of Clotho, did not know that he was saved there, and therefore must have concluded that he was burnt, as Mercury said nothing to the contrary ; Cyrus was beheaded, and Polycrates crucified. Our version is made after the conjectural reading.—W. M.

And life replete with discord. And their towns
 Like hives, where each with his own sting is armed
 To sting his neighbor ; while the few, like wasps, 390
 Harass and rob the weaker. But explain ;
 What is yon shadowy host that hovers round them ?

Mer. Hope, Fear, and Folly ; Pleasure, Avarice,
 Anger and Hatred, and the other Passions.
 Of these commingling with the crowd below, 395
 See Ignorance ; and linked as brother-burglers,
 Dwell with them Hate, Rage, Avarice, and Envy ;
 Ay, and Perplexity and Want-of-knowledge.
 But Fear and Hopes still keep their flight above ;
 The one down-dropping sometimes fills the heart 400
 With terror or amazement, and the others
 Hovering o'er head, where many attempts to catch them
 Soaring aloft escape, and leave him gaping.
 Just what you see in the infernal world
 By Tantalus is suffered. If thou lookest 405
 With more attentive gaze, thine eye will see
 The Fates themselves from off their distaff spinning
 Some slender threads on which it is the doom
 That all mankind must hang. Dost thou not mark
 Something like spiders' webs spun from the distaff 410
 Attached to every man ?

Cha. I see some thin
 And tangled skeins, to each his several thread.

Mer. Right, Charon, for it is decreed that this man
 Is to be slain by that ; that one should be
 Heir of the other with a shorter thread, 415
 And so forth ; for so means the intertwisting.
 Seest thou not then upon what slender strings
 All are suspended ? One man lifted up
 Appears sublime ; but, a short moment after,

On breaking of his thread, no longer able 420
 To bear against the weight, he, tumbling down,
 Will make a mighty clatter ; while another,
 Raised but a petty distance from the earth,
 Will, when he falls, lie noiseless, even his neighbors
 Scarce hearing of his drop.

Cha. For endless laughing, 425
 All this is matter, Mercury.

Mer. Nay, Charon,
 Thou scarce canst tell how worthy of derision
 Are all their over-anxious cares and hopes,
 'Mid which it is their doom to part the world,
 Hurried away by that good fellow, Death.* 430
 Many thou seest, his messengers and servants ; †
 Hot and cold fever, peripneumony,
 Consumption, and the sword, and poison-cup ;
 Banditti, judges, tyrants. None of these Enter their minds while they are doing well ; 435
 But when they make a slip, then loud the cry
 Of “ Out, alas ! ” “ oh, oh ! ” and “ wo is me ! ”
 But if from the first moment of their starting,
 They had reflected they were doomed to die ;
 And after a brief sojourning in life, 440
 Should their departure take as from a dream,
 Leaving all earthly things behind, they would
 Have lived much happier, and been less afflicted
 When death arrived at last. But now they hope
 For ever to enjoy their present life ; 445
 And, therefore, when Death's minister arrives

* Ὑπὸ τοῦ βελτίστου θανάτου.

† The reader of Paradise Lost will be reminded of the “many shapes of death, all dismal,” exhibited by Michael to Adam, in the eleventh book. Milton does not forget “all feverous kinds.” Here ἡπιάλοι καὶ πυρετοὶ — febres, tum fervidæ, tum frigidæ (Latinis veteribus querceræ dictæ).—Mosellanus.

To lead them off as prisoners, fettering them
 With fever or consumption, they are worth
 At the abduction, never having looked
 To being thus dragged away from things around them. 450
 What would he do who now with eager haste
 Builds up a mansion, urging on his workmen,
 Were he to learn his house indeed shall be Brought to completion; but that, for himself,
 He shall survive but to place on the roof, 455
 And then depart, leaving it for his heir's
 Enjoyment; he, its luckless master, never Even having supped within its walls? See him,
 Rejoicing that his wife hath borne a son,
 Calling his friends to feast; and to the child 460
 Giving its father's name. If he should know
 That at seven years of age the boy would die,
 Would he delight so keenly at the birth?
 But he rejoices, for he sees a father
 Proud of his son, the wrestler who has conquered 465
 At the Olympic games. He sees not him
 Who to the funeral pile bears forth his child,
 And knows not with what thread the new-born boy
 May be suspended. See how many wrangle
 About their landmarks, or keep gathering riches, 470
 Till called off by those messengers and agents,
 Of whom I spoke, before they can enjoy them.

Cha. I see all this, and ponder with myself
 What pleasure is in life, or why they grieve
 On parting with it.

Mer. Nay, behold their kings 475
 Who seem the happiest of the race, beyond
 The uncertainty, and as it were the doubt
 Of fortune; even with them it will be found

The bitter far preponderates o'er the sweet.
 Around them spread fears, discord, hatred, plots, 480
 Anger, and flattery. To all of these Are kings exposed. I pass disease, and passions
 Which by the common lot of man are theirs.
 And when we know such ills attend the great,
 We may conjecture what are the afflictions 485
 Of those in humble station.

Cha.

Mercury,

Fain would I tell thee what to me appears
 These mortals and their lives all to resemble.
 Hast thou not sometimes seen upon the water*
 The bubbles raised by some down-dashing stream ; — 490
 I mean those air-blown things that make up froth ?
 Now, some of them are small, and burst at once ;
 But some last longer, and, collecting others
 Around them, swell to larger size, and boast
 A bulkier volume ; but at last they, too, 495
 Are doomed to burst : it can't be otherwise.
 Such is the life of mankind — all swollen up
 With like inflation — greater some, some smaller ;
 Of short continuance some, and speedy fate ;

* Cognatus waxes poetic on this comparison. "Vitas hominum bullis similes facit : quorum alie simulatque natæ sunt protinus evanescent ; alie paulo diutius durant : omnes brevissimis quibusdam intervallis, alie succedunt aliis. Neque quicquam profecto potuit excogitari quod melius representaret quam nihil sit hæc vita nostra qua nihil fragilius nihil fugacius nihil inanius. Unde homines Homero περὶνθάδτοι sunt, cito perituri, sicut Iliad σ. Iidemque cum foliis conferuntur quorum alia ventus humi prosternit alia virescunt tempore verno. Et hoc sibi vult proverbium ab Erasmo nostro copiosissime explanatum, huic loco plurimum inserviens, Homo bulla. Est enim bulla tmor ille inanis, qui visitur in aquis, momenti temporis enascens simul, et evanescens." This last sentence has a strange resemblance to Burns :—

"'Tis like a snow-flake in the river —

A moment bright, then gone for ever."—W. M.

Some even expire the moment they exist ; 500
But all must burst—so wills Necessity.

Mer. Thy simile, Charon, is not worse than Homer's,
Who likens men unto the race of leaves.*

Cha. Then, being such thou seest what they are doing ;
How they dispute, as rivals with each other ; 505
For empires, honors, riches, still contending—
All which they must abandon, and come down
To us of the nether world with but one penny.
Should I not, then, being here thus perched on high,
Exhort them, crying out with mighty voice, 510
To cease their idle labors, and to live
With death for ever set before their eyes ?
Should not I say, “ O fools ! why take such thought
About these matters ? Lay aside your toils ;
You will not live for ever ; nothing here 515
Esteemed illustrious is of endless date ;
Not one of you will at his death-day bear
Such things along with him. Inevitably
He must depart in nakedness ; his house,
And lands, and gold, transferred away to others— 520
Shifting their masters.” If I were to speak
These words, and others of a similar strain,
From such a place as they might well be heard,
Should I not, think'st thou, much advantage life,
And make men far the wiser ?

Mer. My good friend, 525
Thou know'st not how deceit and ignorance
Have so possessed them, that not even a borer
Can pierce their ears, as thickly stuffed with wax
By them, as by Ulysses were the ears
Stuffed of his sailors, when he feared the Sirens. 530

* Il. ζ. 146. οἷη περ φύλλων, κ. τ. λ.—W. M.

They could not hear thee wert thou even to burst
 Thy lungs with shouting. What the stream of Lethe
 Effects with you below is here by ignorance
 Effected. There are some, indeed—a few—
 Who have not with this wax so crammed the ear ; 535
 They bend toward truth, and with a keen, sharp eye,
 Scanning the matters of this world, discern
 What 't is they truly are.

Cha. Why cry we not
 Our warning, then, to them ?

Mer. Superfluous task
 To tell them what they know. Dost thou not see 540
 How, standing from the many all aloof,
 They laugh at things of life, and by no means—
 By no means whatsoe'er—are pleased with them,
 But without question meditate escape
 From life to you, which makes the others hate them, 545
 And censure them for folly ?

Cha. Noble fellows !
 Bravo ! I say. But they are very few.

Mer. They are quite sufficient. Let's now descend.

Cha. Nay, Mercury, one thing more ; and that being shown,
 Thou wilt have then completed our review : 550
 I wish to see those last receptacles
 Where they inhume their bodies.

Mer. These they call
 Tombs, sepulchres, and monuments, good Charon.
 Thou seest outside the towns those heaps of earth,
 Pillars and pyramids ? These are cemeteries, 555
 And storehouses of bodies.

Cha. Why, then, crown they
 These stones, and why with unguent rich anoint them ?
 And why do some, heaping a funeral pile

Before the mounds, and digging out a trench,
 Burn sumptuous viands there, and in the ditches 560
 Pour, if I right conjecture, mead and wine ?

Mer. I know not, ferryman, what use it can be
 To those in Hades ; but it is believed
 That souls returning from the world below
 Will come to supper — very probable ! 565
 Hovering about the savor and the smoke,
 And from the trench will drink up the metheglin.

Cha. They eat or drink whose skulls are dry in dust !
 But 'tis ridiculous to tell thee this,
 Whose daily task it is to bring them down. 570
 Well dost thou know if they can back return,
 Once having lain in earth ! And I too, Mercury,
 Would be but drolly used, who as it is
 Have quite enough to do, if I were bound
 Not only to act ferryman, and take 575
 The dead across, but row them back again
 On drinking expedition. Foolish men !
 What madness not to know how wide the bounds
 Which parts the business of the quick and dead,
 And how we manage matters. 580

*"The tombless man, and he who owns a tomb,
 Alike are dead. Irus, the beggar, lies
 With regal Agamemnon in like doom ;
 With bright-haired Thetis' son Thersites vies.
 For all are shadowy tribes of dead who dwell 585
 Pithless and bare in meads of asphodel."

Mer. By Hercules ! how great a gush of Homer
 Hast thou pumped up ! But now, as thou remindest me,
 I wish to point thee out Achilles' tomb.

* The preceding verses are collected from different parts of Homer, very prettily translated into Latin by Mosellanus.—W. M.

See, there 'tis, by the seaside, at Sigæum ; 590
And at Rhætæum. opposite, lies Ajax.

Cha. No mighty tombs. Show me those famous cities
So spoken of below—as Nineveh,
Sardanapalus' city, Babylon,
Mycenæ, and Cleone—Troy itself. 595
Well I remember ferrying thence across,
For ten whole years, so great a multitude,
That I could find no time either to land
Or dry my boat.

Mer. For Nineveh, 'tis gone,
And not a single trace remains of it— 600
We scarce can tell where once it stood ; and Babylon,
There 'tis before thee, with its well-built towers
And wide circumference—in no long time,
Hard to be found as Nineveh. Mycenæ
I should be shamed to show thee, or Cleone, 605
And still more Ilion ; for I know full well,
That on returning thou wouldst strangle Homer
For his high-sounding verses. But they once
Were famous, though they now are dead ; for cities
Die, ferryman, as men : and, what is stranger, 610
Rivers die too. The stream of Inachus*
Exists no more in Argos.

Cha. Wo upon
The epithets of Homer, and his praises !
“ Wide-streeted, consecrated Ilion,” and “ Cleone, nobly built !” But, while we speak, 615
What men are these engaged in fight, and why
Slaughter they one another ?

Mer. Thou beholdest

* We translate after the reading Ινάχου—τάφρος, not Ιναχου τάφος of the ordinary text.—W. M.

The Argives, and the men of Lacedæmon,
 Under Othryades, their half-dead general,
 With his own blood inscribing there a trophy. 620

Cha. What, Mercury, the cause of war?

Mer. That field
 On which they now are fighting.

Cha. Oh, what madness!

They know not how, if each of them possessed
 Peleponnesus all entire, that scarce
 A foot of ground would Æacus allot them. 625
 In other times shall others till this field,
 With ploughshare oft upturning from the furrow
 This very trophy.

Mer. So these things shall be.

Now we descend; and placing back the mountains,
 Let us depart, I to perform my mission, 630
 Thou to thy ferry-boat. I soon shall come
 To see thee, with my convoy of the dead. [Exit MERCURY.]

Cha. (alone). Kindly done, Mercury; thou shalt ever be Marked as a benefactor. Thou hast given me
 A knowledge of the affairs of wretched mankind. 635
 Kings, golden ingots, hecatombs, and battles!
 No thought of Charon! [Exit.]

III.

Menippus, or the Necromantia.*

[MENIPPUS, Lucian's favorite buffoon character, is sent, in parody of Ulysses's famous descent, to consult Tiresias, in the infernal regions. On returning, bedecked in the guise of the heroes who had formerly visited those realms, he is met by a friend, who interrogates him as to the particulars of his journey. The opening speeches of Menippus are from Euripides or Homer, sometimes slightly parodied. The authenticity of this dialogue has been questioned, but I think on no just ground. It has all the characteristics of Lucian—for the easy style, the perpetual references to Homer and the tragedians, the small range of satire directed against the philosophers and the rich, the jesting with the pagan mythology, and its machinery of the infernal world, the feeling of doubt and perplexity as to the great question of life and death, with many minuter touches—such as the absence of any notice of contemporary events, the constant recurrence to Cyrus, Cræsus, Midas, and other commonplace objects of Greek wit or spite, the scoffs at Philip, Xerxes, Darius, &c.,—all mark his hand. It is a pity that he, an Asiatic of Samosata, did not take this or some other opportunity of giving us sketches of Oriental life and manners in his time. Mithrobarzanes and his incantations are graphic enough in their way; but we should have willingly resigned Charon,

* From Fraser's Magazine, for September, 1839.

and Pluto, and the other inmates of the Grecian hell, for a description of what were really the rites, superstitions, magic arts, or demons, of a disciple of Zoroaster—a fireworshipper-priest in the second century. We should consider even the barbarous and polysyllabic names, which Lucian disdains to repeat, an acceptable exchange for parodies on the Odyssey. But that would have been contrary to what at Athens was voted taste.]

Menippus, or the Necromantia.

MENIPPUS, returning home, is met by PHILONIDES.

Menippus. "All hail, my hall! all hail, my household door!
Joyful I see ye now in light once more."

Philonides. Is this not Menippus, the cynic dog?

No other, if I don't mistake the tribe:—

The very Menippus. But what can mean 5

This garb unwonted, lion's skin, and cap,

And lyre? I must approach him. Menippus,

I greet thee! Whence hast come to visit here?

'Tis now some time since thou hast in the city

Made thine appearance.

Men. "Hither have I come, 10

Leaving the haunts of death, and the gates of gloom,

Where Hades far from heaven has fixed its home."*

Phil. O Hercules! has Menippus been dead,

Unknown to us, and now again revived?

Men. "No; Hades me received while yet alive." 15

Phil. What caused this wonderful and novel visit?

Men. "Youth urged me on, and boldness more than youth."†

Phil. Leave off, my friend, this strain of tragedy,

And, stepping down from thine iambs, tell me,

What means this garb? what urged thee to a journey 20

Not mostly deemed desirable or pleasant?

* For a singular note on those lines in the original, see a very singular book, Palæoromaica.—W. M.

† Translated after the ordinary reading. If for λέον, we read νοῦ, the verse should run:

Youth urged me on, and boldness more than reason.—W. M.

Men. "Need my good friend, my steps to Hades led,
To meet the spirit of Tiresias dead."

Phil. Why, thou'rt stark mad, thus beyond measure venting
These rhapsodies on a friend!

Men. Not so; but fresh 25
From meeting Homer and Euripides,
I'm filled, I know not how, with verse; and numbers
Visit my lips spontaneous. But inform me,
How go on things on earth, and what in town
Are people doing?

Phil. Just the same as ever. 30
There's nothing new; they still are plundering, perjuring,
Lending on hire, and weighing the very farthings.*

Men. Unhappy men, born under evil demon,
They do not know what late has been ordained
I' th' nether world, and how by show of hands 35
Have such decrees against the wealthy passed,
That they've no chance, by Cerberus, of escape.

Phil. What! have the powers below been making laws
Of late about the matters of this world?

Men. They have, by Jove! and many; but I dare not 40
Utter what passed there, nor reveal their secrets,
Lest some informer should 'fore Rhadamanthus
Indict me for impiety.

Phil. Nay, for Jove's sake,
Grudge not this knowledge to a friend—to one
Who knows to hold his tongue, and who, besides, 45
Has been initiate.

Men. 'Tis a hard request,

* 'Οβολοστατοῦσιν. Translated usuras colligunt by Sir Thomas More. Our version, which is at least more verbally literal, is supplied by an Irish editor, Murphy. In the next line, "born under evil demon," is the literal translation of κακοδαίμονες; as in l. 36, 37, "by show of hands," &c., is of κεχειροτδνηται.—W M.

By no means safe withal ; but for thy sake
 I venture. It is then decreed that rich
 And wealth-abounding men, who keep their gold
 Shut up like Danae —

Phil. Nay, my friend, before 50
 Thou tellest me this decree, explain me all
 I wish so much to know. What was the cause
 Of thy descent to hell, and who thy guide ?
 And all in regular order, what thou there
 Hast seen and heard ; for 'tis not probable 55
 That such a virtuoso traveller*
 Neglected aught worthy of sight or hearing.

Men. In this, too, I must gratify thee ; for
 What can one do when pressed so by a friend ?
 First I shall tell thee of my state of mind, 60
 And what impelled me to go down. At school,
 In boyhood, when I heard how Homer told,
 And Hesiod, of the tumults and wars,
 Not of mere demigods, but even among
 The gods themselves ; ay, and adulteries, 65
 Rapines, and violence, and suits, and trials,
 And beating out of sires, and marriages
 Of sisters unto brothers ; why, by Hercules !
 I thought these things most fine and excellent,
 And felt, I own, no trifling fancy toward them. 70
 But when my days of manhood came, I found
 Laws laying down the very contrary
 Of what the poets sang — adultery,
 And violence, and tumult — all forbidden :

* Φιλόκαλον ὄντα. See Akenside's definition of a virtuoso :

“ He knew the various modes of ancient times,
 Their arts and fashions of each various guise,” &c.

It is quoted in Lockhart's Life of Scott, vol. i. — W. M.

So that I stood in much perplexity, 75
 Not knowing how my conduct I should shape.
 I could not think adultery or sedition
 Intestine 'mong themselves the gods would practise,
 Unless they judged such things were virtuous ;
 Nor yet that legislators should enact 80
 Laws to forbid such doings, had not they Thought such a course conduced to general good.
 Being in this doubt, it came into my head
 To follow those so-called philosophers,
 Into their hands to place myself, and beg them 85
 To use me as they pleased, and point me out
 Some steady and consistent path of life.
 So thinking, I approached their schools, not knowing
 I leaped but from the frying-pan to the fire ;*
 For soon, on observation, I discovered 90
 Especial ignorance, and greater puzzling
 Among these teachers, quite enough to show me
 That when compared with them, the lives of plain,
 Unlettered † men was golden. For example :
 One taught that pleasure was the primal object— 95
 The one thing to be sought in every case,
 It being the summum bonum ;‡ while another
 Preached up the praise of toil, laborious life ;
 Keeping the body squalid, and in rags ;
 Of being morose to all, and ever scolding ; 100
 Chanting forth still the far-famed lines of Hesiod,
 Of “ virtue,” and of “ sweat,” and “ climbing up
 The summit of the mountain.” One would teach
 Contempt of riches, holding their possession

* Literally from the smoke to the fire. Τὸ πῦρ ἐκ τοῦ καπνοῦ. We have taken the analogous English proverb. —W. M.

† Χρυσοῦν—τὸν τῶν ἰδιωτῶν βίον.—W. M.

‡ Τὸ εὐδαιμον. “Happiness, our being's end and aim.”—W. M.

A matter of indifference. On the contrary, 105
A fourth would prove that riches was a good.
What shall I say upon the theories
They held about the world ; I, who have heard
Ideas, incorporeals, atoms, voids,
And a like rabble of words, day after day, 110
Bandied in controversy ? And among all
These gross absurdities, the most absurd
It was to find that each of them, disputing
On opposite opinions, could adduce
Triumphant reasons to support his side ; 115
So that I dared not contradict the sage
Who said the thing was hot, nor him who held
That it was cold, though I could clearly feel
The same thing could not at the same time be Both cold and hot. So I became at last 120
Like a man dozing, nodding with my head,
Now backward and now forward. But still worse,
And, above all, ridiculous, I found,
On close inspection, that their course of life
Was in strict contradiction to their precepts. 125
Them, who advised contempt of wealth, I saw
Holding their money close, disputing rates
Of usance, for their lessons taking hire,
Enduring any thing for sake of gain.
I saw the men who bade us spurn at glory, 130
Directing all their efforts to obtain it ;
And almost all inveighing against pleasure,
But in their private lives pursuing it ;
Though publicly abused : In this hope baffled,
I felt the more chagrined, but with this comfort, 135
That in the company of many, and sage,
Men much cried up for wisdom, I was wandering

Devoid of sense, and ignorant of the truth.
 As I lay sleepless with these cares, methought
 I best should go to Babylon to beseech 140
 Some of the Magi, Zoroaster's pupils,
 And in his schools successors; for I heard
 That they, by charms and incantations, could
 Open the gates of Hades, and lead safely
 Whom they pleased thither, and bring back again. 145
 I thought it, therefore, best if I could strike
 With some of them a bargain, and descend
 To counsel with Tiresias, the Bœotian,
 To learn from him (being both a sage and prophet)
 What life was best, such as a man right thinking 150
 Would for himself select. So starting up
 I made for Babylon with all my speed;
 And there I with a wise Chaldæan met,
 Skilled in divining arts. His head was hoary,
 And from his chin hung down a reverend beard, 155
 His name Mithrobarzanes. Earnest prayer
 With difficulty won him to consent,
 That for whatever price he chose to ask,
 He would conduct me down. Taking me then
 In charge, he first, for nine-and-twenty days, 160
 Commencing with the moon, in the Euphrates
 Bathed me at dawn, turned towards the rising sun,
 He muttering all the while a lengthened charm,
 Which I could scarcely hear; for like a herald*
 Who mumbles at the games, with indistinct 165
 And rapid speech he spoke, but I conjectured
 He was invoking demons. After that,
 The incantation over, in my face
 Three times he spat, and led me back again,

* For οἱ φαῖδλοι τῶν κήρυκων, read τραυλοῖ, lisping, inarticulate.—W. M.

Not looking upon any one we met. 170

Acorns our food ; our drink was only milk,

Or mead, or water from Choaspes' stream ;*

We couched upon the grass, beneath the sky.

These previous ceremonies duly done,

At midnight to the Tigris was I taken, 175

For fit purgation, and due lustral rites ;

There I was sanctified with torch and squill,

And many a thing besides—he, in meanwhile,

Murmuring his charm, and then with magic art

Bewizarding me wholly† and around 180

Walking in circuit to protect me safe

From spectres, homeward we returned, on foot

Journeying as I was. The time remaining

Was spent in preparations for our voyage.

A magic garment he put on, in fashion 185

The Median garb resembling. As for me,

He decked me as thou seest, in lion's skin

And cap, and with this lyre besides desiring

That, if my name were asked, I should by no means

Say Menippus, but answer Hercules,‡ 190

Or Orpheus, or Ulysses.

Phil.

Why is this ?

I can't divine the reason of the dress,

Or of these names.

Men.

The reason's evident,

And no forbidden mystery. As those heroes

Had gone, before us, living men to Hades, 195

He thought, if he could pass me in their likeness,

I could more easily deceive the watch

* The only water drank by the kings of Persia.—W. M.

† "Ὅλον με καταμαγεύσας.

‡ This joke is borrowed from Aristophanes, who makes Bacchus endeavor to pass the Styx in the character of Hercules.—W. M.

Of Æacus, and back return without Hind'rance or molestation, as appearing
 In old-accustomed fashion, by my dress 200
 Suffered to pass through in right tragic mode.
 Now dawned the day, and, for the river-side
 Departing, we prepared to sail. A skiff,
 Victims, and mead, and all things necessary
 For the mysterious voyage, were ready there. 205
 When all was placed on board, we too embarked,
 "In sorrowing wise, pouring the copious tear."*
 For some time we were wafted on the stream;
 And when we reached the marsh and lake in which Euphrates disembogues, this too we crossed, 210
 And gained a desert, woody, sunless land.
 There disembarking (old Mithrobarzanes
 Leading the way), we dug the pit, and slew
 The sheep, and sprinkled with their blood the trench.
 Meanwhile the Magus, with a lighted torch, 215
 No longer now in bated breath, but loud
 As he could stretch his voice, at once proceeded
 Dæmons, and Pains, and Furies, to invoke,
 "And mighty Hecate, and Proserpine dread;"†
 With other names obscure and barbarous, 220
 Of many a syllable. Then, in a trice,
 All round began to shake, and by the charm
 The earth was burst asunder, and the howl
 Of Cerberus baying from afar was heard:—

* From the Odyssey, which is here parodied throughout.—W. M.

† Translated after the reading ἐπαίνην, not αἰτείνην. The line is evidently patched together for a hexametre, and αἰτείνην is therefore inadmissible. Ἐπαίνη is a common epithet of Proserpine. Proserpine is accented on the second syllable, as in Milton:

"Not that fair field

Of Enna where Prospérine, gathering flowers," &c.
 —and in other elder English poets.—W. M.

It was a grim and terrible affair.

225

"Aidoneus, king of Ghosts, trembled below," †

And most of hell was visible—the lake,

And Pyriphlegethon, and Pluto's palace.

Descending through the yawning chasm, we there

Found Rhadamanthus almost dead with terror.

230

Cerberus barked at first, and shook his tail ;

But, on the instant, as I struck my lyre,

Lulled by the melody he fell asleep.

But, when we reached the lake, we could not cross ;

The boat was full, and crowded all with wailing.

235

In it sailed wounded men—one in the thigh,

Another in the head, a third elsewhere

Crushed by a blow : it seemed to me they all

Had been engaged in battle. But when Charon—

Excellent fellow !—saw the lion's skin,

240

Thinking me Hercules, he took me aboard,

Willingly ferried us across, and pointed

Our road on landing. Then Mithrobarzanes

Went first : I followed, holding him from behind,

Until we came into a spreading meadow,

245

Thick set with asphodel, while all around us

Hovered the shrieking shades.* A little further

Making our progress, at the judgment-seat

Of Minos we arrived. And there he sate

Upon a lofty throne ; close by him standing

250

Were Tortures, Pains, and Furies. Opposite

Came, led in rank, bound in a lengthened chain,

A host of culprits ; they were said to be

Adulterers, bawds, publicans, parasites,

Common informers, and that sort of folk 255

* Il. v. 61.

† Τετραγυῖται τῶν νεκρῶν σκιάι.

Who breed disturbance in affairs of life.
 Apart from them, the rich were led to judgment —
 The pale, pot-bellied, gouty usurers —
 Each bowed beneath a neck-yoke, and a crow*
 Weighing two talents. We stood by, and saw 260
 And heard their pleadings. Their accusers were
 Of strange and marvellous nature.

Phil. In the name
 Of Jove, who were they? Do not grudge to tell me.

Men. Know'st thou the shadows which our bodies cast
 When opposite the sun?

Phil. Of course I do. 265

Men. Well, when we die, these shadows come to charge us,
 To testify against us, and bear witness
 Of all our deeds in life. Worthy of faith
 They needs must be, as holding always by,
 And never parting from ourselves. Then Minos, 270
 Carefully judging in each several case,
 Sent the condemned to the appointed mansion
 For impious shades, to suffer there the fate
 Due to their daring crimes. With special harshness
 He leant on men puffed up with wealth and honors, 275
 Who almost claimed a right of adoration,
 Scorning their short-lived pride and arrogance,
 And their forgetfulness that they were mortal,
 And with but mortal gifts endowed. And now
 Their splendid trappings doffed, their wealth, their lineage, 280
 And power, they stood, with downcast eyes, all naked,
 Awaiting judgment, in their minds revolving
 If all their former joys were but a dream.

* Κόρακα διατάντων. Tormenti genus videtur, says Guyetus; and nobody since his time appears to have been better informed. Διατάντων is in all probability a corruption.—W. M.

This seeing, in my heart I felt delight
 Beyond all measure. If I chanced to see 285
 Among them any whom I recognised,
 Near him I quietly drew me, to remind him
 How great a man he was in life—to what
 A size he puffed himself, when, in the morning,
 A crowd stood by his gates, for his appearance 290
 Attending, thrust about, or by his lackeys
 Wholly excluded ; until he at last
 Arising on them, clad in gold and purple,
 Or particolored robe, rendered them happy
 By stretching forth his breast or hand to kiss ;— 295
 It galled them when they heard me. But one case
 Was judged with partiality by Minos ;
 'Twas that of Dionysius the Sicilian.
 By Dion he with many unholy crimes
 Was charged, which by the Stoa's testimony 300
 Were witnessed to ; but up came Aristippus,
 He of Cyrene (whom they hold in honor,
 And with much influence favor down below),
 And set him free from punishment, albeit
 He was upon the point of being tied 305
 To the Chimæra, on the plea that he Had been of no small use to the literati
 In money matters. Leaving the tribunal,
 We reached the place of punishment, and there
 We saw and heard many most piteous things ; 310
 We heard the sound of stripes, and the sad groans
 Of wretches burning in the flames ; we saw
 Wheels, torturing instruments, and chains. Chimæra
 Tore them in the pieces, Cerberus devoured them ;
 All in like mode were punished, king and slaves, 315
 Satraps and paupers, men of wealth and beggars,

And all repented of their desperate crimes.
 And some we recognised who late had died,
 They hid themselves for shame, and skulked away;
 Or if they dared to look, 'twas with a glance 320
 Servile and fawning; they who in this life
 Had been so haughty and so insolent.
 As for the poor, half of their penalties
 Were pardoned, and an intermission given
 Between the times of punishment. I saw 325
 Names long renowned in fable—Sisyphus,
 Ixion there, and Tantalus the Phrygian,
 In evil plight—and Tityus, son of Earth,
 O Hercules! what a size! and what a space
 Of ground his body covered as he lay! 330
 These passed, we reached the Acherusian plain,
 And there we found the demigods and heroines,
 And all the crowd of death, in wards and tribes
 Dwelling together—ancient some, and mouldy,
 And “vanishing away,” as Homer calls* them. 335
 But some again were fresh, of good consistence—
 Those specially of Egypt, from their pickling.
 It was not easy to distinguish each
 From other, all alike being naked bones—
 Requiring looking sharp to recognise; 340
 There they all lay together, low and lofty,
 Retaining naught that decked them here above.
 Gazing upon this crowd of skeletons,
 All like in aspect with their hollow looks
 And dread appearance, in my mind I felt 345
 No little doubt how to discriminate
 Between Thersites and the handsome Nireus,
 The beggar Irus and Alcinous,

* Ἀμενήτως

Or the cook Pyrrhias from King Agamemnon :
 None of their former marks of recognition 350
 Remained to trace them ; all alike were bones,
 Obscure and undistinguished, nothing left
 By which we could distinguish them asunder.
 Seeing all this, I could not help comparing
 The life of mankind to a long procession, 355
 Managed and led by Fortune, who assigns
 Various and particolored garbs to each
 Who joins the train. One in a kingly style
 She decks, and dresses in a proud tiara—
 Surrounds with body-guards, and on his head 360
 She plants a diadem ; while on another
 She sets the raiment of a slave ; to this one
 She gives the mask of beauty, and to that
 Of ugliness and ridicule the form.
 The spectacle, of course, requires variety ; 365
 And oft-times, in the middle of the play,
 She changes dresses, not permitting some
 To play it out to the end as they began.
 For instance : stripping Cræsus, she compelled him
 To take the garment of a slave and captive ; 370
 And with Polycrate's tyrant-robe
 Dressed up Mæandrius, erst among the servants
 Playing his part ; and, for a little while,
 Allowed him that attire. But when the time
 For ending of the drama is arrived, 375
 Each must give up his part, and with his body
 Resign his dress, and be as at the first,
 No different from his neighbor. There are some Who, when the manager, Fortune, standing by,
 Demands the properties, are grieved or angry, 380
 As if they were deprived of their own goods,

And not of garments lent them but for use.
 Thou mayst have seen tragedians on the stage*
 According as the drama needs their service—
 Now Creons, Priams, Agamemnons; now, 385
 After in grave and noble style, portraying
 The part of Cecrops or Erectheus, sinking,
 If so the poet bids, to act a slave;
 And when the play is over, every one
 Laying off his gold-bedizened robe, and doffing 390
 His mask, and stepping from his tragic buskins,
 A poor and humble actor issues forth,
 No longer Agamemnon, son of Atreus,
 Or Creon of Menæcius, but by name
 Polus,† the son of Charicles of Sunium; 395
 Or Satyrus of Marathon, the son
 Of Theogiton. Such as I looked on,
 Seemed to me human life.

Phil.

But, Menippus,

Have those who lie on earth 'neath lofty tombs,
 With costly columns, statues, and inscriptions, 400
 No greater honor than the vulgar dead?

Men. Nonsense, my friend: if thou hadst seen Mausolus—

I mean the Carian, him so much renowned
 For his proud sepulchre—thou wouldst have laughed
 With ceaseless laughter; humbly thrust aside 405
 Into a corner, lost amid the crowd
 Of the plebeian dead; no otherwise
 Profiting from his tomb, except in being
 Weighed down beneath so ponderous a load;
 For, sir, when Æacus assigns to each 410

* There were but three actors allowed in a Greek play, and, consequently, they often doubled.—W. M.

† Polus and Satyrus were famous players.—W. M.

His spot of ground—and he will at the most
 Measure out but a foot—there must ye lie
 Content, and cramped to fit the space allotted.
 Still louder were thy laughter hadst thou seen
 Satraps and kings turned beggarmen,* perhaps 415
 Selling salt fish for sustenance, or teaching
 The rudiments of letters, spurned and scorned
 By passers-by, and smitten on the cheek
 Like vilest slaves. I scarce could hold myself
 When I saw Philip, king of Macedon. 420
 There he was pointed out to me in a corner,
 Patching old shoes for hire; and many more—
 Your Xerxeses, Polycrates', Darii,
 Alms-asking in the streets.

Phil. Strange stories these
 About earth's monarchs, and scarce credible; 425
 But what do Socrates, Diogenes,
 And others of the wise?

Men. For Socrates,
 He rambles up and down arguing with all.
 He chiefly chats with Palamedes, Nestor,
 Ulysses, or some other prating ghost. 430
 His legs are still puffed up and swollen out
 After the poison. Good Diogenes
 Dwells next to Midas and Sardanapalus,
 The Phrygian and Assyrian, and some other
 Luxurious princes. When he hears them groaning 435
 Over their former fortunes, then he laughs

* This is imitated, but with infinitely more humor, by Rabelais, book ii. chap. xxx.: "Comment Epistemon qui avoyt la coupe testée feut guary habillement par Panurge; et des nouvelles des dyables, et des damnez." It is Alexander, however, not Philip, whom Epistemon saw mending old shoes. "Car je veidz Alexandre le Grande, que repetassoyt des vielles chausses, et ainsi guaignoyt sa paourue vie."—W. M.

In great delight ; and, mostly on his back
 Supinely stretched, he sings out in a harsh
 And tuneless voice, that drowns their sorry groans.
 He so annoys them, that they talk of changing 110
 Their quarters, quite unable to endure
 The scoffings of Diogenes.

Phil.

Enough.

Now tell me the decree which thou at first
 Didst mention was ordained against the rich.

Men. 'Tis well remembered, for I know not how, 445
 Though I intended to have spoken of this,
 It slipped from my discourse. The officers
 Called an assembly to deliberate
 On things pertaining to the common weal ;
 So seeing many running to the place, 450
 I mixed myself among the crowd of dead,
 And joined the meeting as a member. There
 Some matters were debated, and at last
 This business of the wealthy. They were charged
 With dreadful crimes and manifold offences, 455
 Oppression, pride, injustice, arrogance ;
 And then a leader of the people rising,
 Proposed the following decree :—

DECREE.

Whereas,

The rich commit many and lawless deeds, .
 Injuring the poor by violence and outrage, 460
 And in all manners treating them with scorn ;
Be it decreed, by senators and people,
 That when they die, their bodies must be punished
 Like those of other criminals ; but their souls
 Must be sent back again to life, and there 465

Transmigrate into asses, in that form
 So to remain twenty-five myriad years,
 Passing from ass to ass, and bearing burdens
 Driven by the poor; that period o'er, they may Have liberty to die. The motion's made 470
 By Skull the son of Skeleton, a native
 Of Ghostland, member of the tribe of Sapless.*
 When the decree was read, the magistrates
 Gave it their votes, the mob held up their hands,
 And Brimo bellowed forth, and Cerberus howled : 475
 So are decrees there made and ratified.
 'This passed in the assembly; then I went
 Upon my errand, and approached Tiresias;
 I told him all my story, and I begged
 He would pronounce what mode of life was best. 480
 He laughed, and said (he is a blind old fellow,
 Little, and pale, and shrill-voiced), "Oh, my son,
 I know the cause of thy perplexity;
 All owing to philosophers, who teach
 Discordant doctrines; but I must not tell thee, 485
 It is forbidden here by Rhadamanthus."
 "Nay, father," said I, "speak, and don't despise me, Wandering still blinder than thyself through life."
 He took me then away from all the rest;
 And, stooping to my ear, "The life," he said, 490
 "Of plain, unlearned men is best and wisest;
 Lay, then, aside the foolish vanity
 Of musing upon things beyond thy reach;
 And asking after ends and principles;
 Spit upon silly syllogisms, and think 495

* Κρανίων Σκελετίωνος Νεκυσίτεϋς, φυλῆς Ἀλιθαντιάδος. In More, "Calvarius patre Aridello patriâ Manicensis, tribu Stygiana." Our version is again borrowed mostly from Murphy.—W. M.

Such stuff mere nonsense, and confine thy search
To this one object—how of the present time
Disposing well, thou mayst run on through life,
Laughing at most things, caring about nothing.”

“ This having said, he turned again to dwell 500

Within the meadow set with asphodel.”

Evening had now come on, and I addressed

Mithrobarzanes. “Why should we delay?

We must return to life.” “Courage,” said he,

“I’ll point thee out a short and easy path.” 505

He took me to a place of deeper gloom,

And pointed with his hand to where a light,

Dim and obscure, shone in as through a chink.

“That,” said he, “is Trophonius’ cave, through which

They come down from Bœotia: go through that, 510

And in a moment thou wilt be in Greece.”

I gladly heard these words—embraced the Magus,

And, with no little difficulty creeping

Up through the narrow pass, I know not how,

I found myself at once in Lebadía. 515

IV.

Menippus and Chiron.

[ἡκοντα ὡ Χείρων, κ. τ. λ. Ed. Bas. tom. ii. p. 69.]

THIS is a version in Spenserian stanzas of one of the old Samosatan's dialogues, in which Menippus ridicules the Centaur Chiron's desire for death. Is not this little dialogue the prototype of the Childe Harold school—and all the miseries of its members so deplorably bewailed by themselves, and so delightfully parodied by the Smiths in the Rejected Addresses :

“Sated with home, of wife, of children tired,
The weary soul is driven abroad to roam;
Sated abroad, all seen, yet naught admired,
The restless soul is driven to ramble home.”

Menippus and Chiron.

I.

Menippus. Chiron ! they tell me, thou, a being immortal,
Hast prayed for death ?

Chiron. What thou hast heard is true ;
I, with the rest, within the infernal portal
Deathless albeit I was, confront thy view.

Men. What love of death, an object to the crew
Of mankind dire, this wish within thee cast ?

Chi. Thee I may tell, whose thoughts are of the few—
Not of the vulgar crowd—the time was past,
Since in immortal life I found it joy to last.

II.

Men. To live was joyless, then, and see the day ?

Chi. Not so ; but pleasure seemed a various thing—
Of differing color, not of a single ray—
But still to live—still that each hour should bring Same sun, same food, same hours upon the wing—
The endless following of the one routine—
It filled my soul to very sickening.
And then I felt that happiness had been
Not in monotonous rest, but constant changing scene.

III.

Men. Well said ! But since thou hitherward hast come,
How dost thou feel the change ?

Chi. Indifferent well :

'The light I think not better than the gloom,

And like this all—equality of hell.

No wants we feel of those on earth who dwell.

Hunger and thirst—all such desires are gone.

Men. Take care, good Chiron, lest thy words rebel Against this eloquence of thy reasoning tone.

Chi. What, cynic, dost thou mean ?

Men. Why, if thy life had grown

IV.

Tasteless to thee, from being still the same,

And its no-variance made thee sick of soul,

What in this changeless land can be thine aim ?

Must thou not wish in other lives to roll,

And restless thence, to seek a different goal ?

Chi. What can I do ? Let me thy counsel share !

Men. Do this. Whatever is the wise man's dole,

With that be satisfied ; let whatsoe'er

Happens content him : naught seems hard to bear.

THE END.

POETRY AND THE DRAMA.

The Works of Shakespeare, reprinted from the newly-discovered copy of the Folio of 1632, in the possession of J. PAYNE COLLIER, with numerous Illustrations. One vol. Imperial 8vo. Cloth, $4; sheep, $4 25; half morocco, plain, $5 00; marble edges, $5 50; half calf, or morocco extra, $6 00; full morocco, antique, $7 00.

Same as above, cheap edition, cloth, $3 00; sheep, $3 50; imitation morocco, full gilt, $4 00.

The Works of Shakespeare, same as above. Uniform in size with the celebrated Chiswick Edition, 8 vols. 16mo, cloth, $6 00; half calf or morocco, plain, $10 00; half calf or morocco, extra, $12 00.

Notes and Emendations of Shakespeare. Notes and Emendations to the Text of Shakespeare's Plays, from the Early Manuscript Corrections in a copy of the folio of 1632, in the possession of JOHN PAYNE COLLIER, F. S. A. Third edition, with a fac-simile of the Manuscript Corrections. 1 vol., 12mo., cloth. Price $1 50.

Lilian, and other Poems. By WINTHROP MACKWORTH PRAED. Now first collected. 1 vol., 12mo. Price $1 00.

Lays of the Scottish Cavaliers. By WILLIAM E. AYTOUN, Professor of Literature and Belles-Lettres in the University of Edinburgh, and Editor of Blackwood's Magazine. 1 vol., 12mo, cloth. Price $1 00.

Firmilian; a Spasmodic Tragedy. By T. PERCY JONES [W. E. Aytoun]. Price 50 cents.

The Book of Ballads. By BON GAULTIER. 1 vol. 12mo, cloth. Price 75 cents.

Poetical Works of Fitz-Greene Halleck. New and only Complete Edition, containing several New Poems, together with many now first collected. 1 vol., 12mo. Price $1 00.

Simms' Poetical Works. Poems: Descriptive, Dramatic, Legendary, and Contemplative. By WM. GILMORE SIMMS. With a Portrait on steel. 2 vols., 12mo, cloth. Price $2 50.

Lyra, and other Poems. By ALICE CAREY. 1 vol., 12mo, cloth. Price 75 cents.

The Poetical Works of W. H. C. Hosmer. Now first collected. With a Portrait on steel. 2 vols., 12mo. Price $2 00.

Scottish Songs, Ballads, and Poems. By HEW AINSLIE, author of "The Ingleside," "On with the Tartan," "Rover of Loch-Ryan," &c., &c. 1 vol., 12mo. Price $1 00.

The Poets and Poetry of Ireland. 1 vol., 8vo, with Plates. Edited by Dr. R. SHELTON MACKENZIE. [In Press.]

Oliatta, and other Poems. By HOWARD H. CALDWELL. 12mo, cloth. Price $1 06

HISTORY AND BIOGRAPHY

Ancient Egypt under the Pharaohs. By JOHN KENRICK, M. A. In 2 vols., 12mo. Price $2 50.

Newman's Regal Rome. An Introduction to Roman History. By FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, Professor of Latin in the University College, London. 12mo, cloth. Price 63 cents.

The Catacombs of Rome, as Illustrating the Church of the First Three Centuries. By the Right Rev. W. INGRAHAM KIP, D. D., Missionary Bishop of California. Author of "Christmas Holidays in Rome," "Early Conflicts of Christianity," &c., &c. With over 100 Illustrations. 12mo, cloth. Price 75 cents.

The History of the Crusades. By JOSEPH FRANÇOIS MICHAUD. Translated by W. Robson. 3 vols., 12mo, Maps. Price $3 75.

Napoleon in Exile; or, a Voice from St. Helena. Being the Opinions and Reflections of Napoleon, on the most important Events in his Life and Government, in his own words. By BARRY E. O'MEARA, his late Surgeon; with a Portrait of Napoleon, after the celebrated picture of Delaroche, and a view of St. Helena, both beautifully engraved on steel. 2 vols., 12mo, cloth. Price $2 00.

Jomini's Campaign of Waterloo. The Political and Military History of the Campaign of Waterloo, from the French of General Baron Jomini. By Lieut. S. V. BENET, U. S. Ordnance, with a Map. 12mo, cloth. Price 75 cents.

Napier's Peninsular War. History of the War in the Peninsula, and in the South of France, from the Year 1807 to 1814. By W. F. P. NAPIER, C. B., Colonel 43d Regiment, &c. Complete in 1 vol. 8vo. Price $2 50.

Napier's Peninsular War. History of the War in the Peninsula, and in the South of France, from the Year 1807 to 1814. By W. F. P. NAPIER, C. B., Colonel 43d Regiment, &c. In 5 vols., 12mo, with Portraits and Plans. Price $6 25. [In Press.]

Discovery and Exploration of the Mississippi Valley. With the Original Narratives of Marquette, Allouez, Membré, Hennepin, and Anastase Douay. By JOHN GILMARY SHEA. With a fac-simile of the Original Map of Marquette. 1 vol., 8vo, cloth, antique. Price $2.

Narrative of a Voyage to the Northwest Coast of America, in the Years 1811-'12-'13 and 1814; or, the First Settlement on the Pacific. By Gabriel Franchère. Translated and Edited by J. V. HUNTINGTON. 12mo, cloth. Plates. Price $1 00.

Las Cases' Napoleon. Memoirs of the Life, Exile, and Conversations of the Emperor Napoleon. By the Count LAS CASES. With Portraits on steel, woodcuts, &c. 4 vols., 12mo, cloth, $4 00; half calf or morocco extra, $8 00.

- Life of the Rt. Hon. John Philpot Curran. By his Son, Wm. Henry Curran; with Notes and Additions, by Dr. R. SHELTON MACKENZIE, and a Portrait on Steel. 12mo, cloth. Price $1 25.
- Sketches of the Irish Bar. By the Right Hon. Richard Lalor Sheil, M. P. Edited, with a Memoir and Notes, by Dr. R. SHELTON MACKENZIE. Fourth Edition. In 2 vols. Price $2 00.
- Barrington's Sketches. Personal Sketches of his Own Time. By SIR JONAH BARRINGTON, Judge of the High Court of Admiralty in Ireland; with Illustrations by Darley. Third Edition. 12mo, cloth. Price $1 25.
- Moore's Life of Sheridan. Memoirs of the Life of the Rt. Hon. Richard Brinsley Sheridan. By THOMAS MOORE; with Portrait after Sir Joshua Reynolds. 2 vols., 12mo, cloth. Price $2 00.
- Men of the Time, or Sketches of Living Notables, Authors, Architects, Artists, Composers, Demagogues, Divines, Dramatists, Engineers, Journalists, Ministers, Monarchs, Novelists, Politicians, Poets, Philanthropists, Preachers, Savans, Statesmen, Travellers, Voyagers, Warriors. 1 vol., 12mo. Containing nearly Nine Hundred Biographical Sketches. Price $1 50.
- Lorenzo Benoni; or, Passages in the Life of an Italian. Edited by a Friend. 1 vol., 12mo. $1 00.
- The Workingman's Way in the World. Being the Autobiography of a Journeyman Printer. By CHARLES MANBY SMITH, Author of "Curiosities of London Life." 12mo, cloth. Price $1 00.
- Classic and Historic Portraits. By JAMES BRUCE. 12mo, cloth. Price $1 00.
- Ladies of the Covenant. Memoirs of Distinguished Scottish Females, embracing the Period of the Covenant and the Persecution. By Rev. JAMES ANDERSON. 1 vol., 12mo. Price $1 25.
- Tom Moore's Suppressed Letters. Notes from the Letters of Thomas Moore to his Music-Publisher, James Power (the publication of which was suppressed in London), with an Introductory Letter from Thomas Crofton Croker, Esq., F. S. A. With four Engravings on steel. 12mo, cloth. Price $1 50.
- Fifty Years in Both Hemispheres; or, Reminiscences of a Merchant's Life. By VINCENT NOLTE. 12mo. Price $1 25. (Eighth Edition.)
- Men and Women of the Eighteenth Century. By ARSENE HOUSSAYE. With beautifully-engraved Portraits of Louis XV. and Madame de Pompadour. 2 vols., 12mo, 450 pages each, extra superfine paper. Price $2 50.
- Philosophers and Actresses. By ARSENE HOUSSAYE. With beautifully-engraved Portraits of Voltaire and Madame Parabère. 2 vols., 12mo. Price $2 50.
- Life of the Honorable William H. Seward, with Selections from his Works. Edited by GEORGE E. BAKER. 12mo, cloth Portrait. Price $1 00.

The History of Texas, from its Settlement in 1685 to its Annexation to the United States. By H. YOAKUM, Esq., of the Texas Bar; with Portraits, Maps, and Plans. 2 vols., 8vo, cloth or sheep. Price $5 00. [In Press.]

The History of Louisiana—Spanish Domination. By CHARLES GAYARRE. 8vo, cloth. Price $2 50.

The History of Louisiana—French Domination. By CHARLES GAYARRE. 2 vols., 8vo, cloth. Price $3 50.

The Life of P. T. Barnum, written by himself; in which he narrates his early history as Clerk, Merchant, and Editor, and his later career as a Showman. With a Portrait on steel, and numerous Illustrations by Darley. 1 vol., 12mo. Price $1 25.

A Memorial of Horatio Greenough, consisting of a Memoir, Selections from his Writings, and Tributes to his Genius, by HENRY T. TUCKERMAN, Author of "Sicily, a Pilgrimage," "A Month in England," &c., &c. 12mo, cloth. Price 75 cents.

Minnesota and its Resources; to which are appended Camp-Fire Sketches, or Notes of a Trip from St. Paul to Pembina and Selkirk Settlements on the Red River of the North. By J. WESLEY BOND. With a New Map of the Territory, a View of St. Paul, and one of the Falls of St. Anthony. 1 vol., 12mo, cloth. Price $1 00.

The Private Life of an Eastern King. By a Member of the Household of his Late Majesty, Nussir-u-deen, King of Oude. 12mo, cloth. Price 75 cents.

Doran's Queens of England. The Queens of England, of the House of Hanover. By Dr. DORAN, Author of "Table Traits," "Habits and Men," &c. 2 vols., 12mo, cloth. Price $2 00

VOYAGES AND TRAVELS.

The U. S. Japan Expedition. Japan and Around the World. An Account of Three Visits to the Japanese Empire, with Sketches of Madeira, St. Helena, Cape of Good Hope, Mauritius, Ceylon, Singapore, China, Loo Choo, &c., 1852 to 1855. By J. W. SPALDING, Captain's Clerk of the Flagship "Mississippi." 1 vol., 12mo, with Illustrations. Cloth. Price $1 25.

Cosas de España. (Strange Things of Spain.) Going to Madrid via Barcelona. 12mo, cloth. Price $1 00.

A Month in England. By HENRY T. TUCKERMAN, Author of "Sicily, a Pilgrimage," "The Optimist," &c. 12mo, cloth. Price 75 cts

Sicily, a Pilgrimage, by Henry T. Tuckerman, Author of "A Month in England," &c., &c. 12mo, cloth. Price 75 cents.

A Tennessean Abroad; or, Letters from Europe, Asia, and Africa. By RANDALL W. MCGAVOCK, A. M., L. L. B., Member of the Nashville Bar. 12mo, cloth. Price $1 00.

Life in the Mission, the Camp, and the Zenana. By Mrs. COLIN MACKENZIE. 2 vols., 12mo, cloth. Price $2 00.

The Russian Shores of the Black Sea, with a Voyage down the Volga, and a Tour through the Country of the Cossacks. By LAURENCE OLIPHANT, Author of "A Journey to Nepal." Fourth Edition. 12mo, cloth. Two maps and eighteen cuts. Price 75 cents.

A Year with the Turks; or, Sketches of Travel in the European and Asiatic Dominions of the Sultan. By WARRINGTON W. SMYTH, A. M. With a colored Ethnological Map of the Turkish Empire. Third Edition. 12mo, cloth. Price 75 cents.

Russo-Turkish Campaigns of 1828 and 1829. With a View of the Present State of Affairs in the East. By Colonel CHESNEY, R. A., D. C. L., F. R. S., Author of the Expedition for the Survey of the Rivers Euphrates and Tigris. With an Appendix, containing the Diplomatic Correspondence of the Four Powers, and the Secret Correspondence between the Russian and English Governments. 1 vol., 12mo, cloth; Maps. Price $1 00.

White, Red, and Black. Sketches of American Society, during the Visits of their Guests. By FRANCIS and THERESA PULSZKY. 2 vols., 12mo, cloth. Price $2 00.

The Blackwater Chronicle: A Narrative of an Expedition into the Land of Canaan, in Randolph County, Virginia, a Country flowing with Wild Animals, such as Panthers, Bears, Wolves, Elk, Deer, Otter, Badger, &c., &c., with innumerable Trout, by Five Adventurous Gentlemen, without any Aid of Government, and solely by their Own Resources, in the Summer of 1851. By "THE CLERKE OF OXFORD." With Illustrations from Life by Strother. 12mo, cloth. Price $1 00.

SCIENCE AND ART.

Griscom on Ventilation. The Uses and Abuses of Air; showing its Influence in Sustaining Life, and Producing Disease, with remarks on the Ventilation of Houses, and the best Methods of Securing a Pure and Wholesome Atmosphere inside of Dwellings, Churches, Workshops, &c. By JOHN H. GRISCOM, M. D. 1 vol., 12mo. Price 75 cents.

Bronchitis, and Kindred Diseases. In language adapted to common readers. By W. W. HALL, M. D. 1 vol., 12mo. Price $1 00.

Bodenhamer on the Diseases of the Rectum. Practical Observations on some of the Diseases of the Rectum, Anus, and Continuous Textures; giving their Nature, Seat, Causes, Symptoms, Consequences, and Prevention; especially addressed to non-medical readers. By W. BODENHAMER, M. D. Second edition, with plates, &c. In 1 vol., 8vo, cloth. Price $2 00.

Comparative Physiognomy; or, Resemblances between Men and Animals. By J. W. REDFIELD, M. D. 1 vol., 8vo, with several hundred Illustrations. Price $2 00.

Episodes of Insect Life. By ACHETA DOMESTICA. In three Series:—1. Insects of Spring. 2. Insects of Summer. 3. Insects of Autumn. Beautifully Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt, $2 00 each. The same beautifully colored after Nature, extra gilt, $4 00 each.

Narratives of Sorcery and Magic, from the most Authentic Sources. By THOMAS WRIGHT, A. M., &c. 1 vol., 12mo. Price $1 25.

The Night-Side of Nature; or, Ghosts and Ghost-Seers. By CATHARINE CROWE. 1 vol., 12mo. Price $1 00.

Art and Industry, as represented in the Exhibition at the Crystal Palace, New York. Showing the Progress and State of the various Useful and Esthetic Pursuits. From the "New York Tribune." Revised and Edited by HORACE GREELEY. 12mo, cloth, fine paper, $1 00. Paper covers, 50 cents.

Chapman's American Drawing-Book. The American Drawing-Book, intended for Schools, Academies, and Self-Instruction. By JOHN G. CHAPMAN, N. A. Three Parts now published. Price 50 cents each. [Part IV. in Press.]

The History and Poetry of Finger-Rings. By CHARLES EDWARDS, Esq., Counsellor-at-Law. With Illustrations, 12mo, cloth. Price $1 00.

BELLES-LETTRES.

Revolutionary Tales, by WM. GILMORE SIMMS, Esq. New and Revised Editions, with Illustrations by Darley.

The Partisan; A Romance of the Revolution. 12mo, cloth. Price $1 25.

Mellichampe; A Legend of the Santee. 12mo, cloth. Price $1 25.

Katharine Walton; or, The Rebel of Dorchester. 12mo, cloth. Price $1 25.

The Scout; or, The Black Riders of the Congaree. 12mo, cloth. Price $1 25.

Woodcraft; or, The Hawks about the Dovecote. 12mo, cloth. Price $1 25.

The Forayers; or, The Raid of the Dog-Days. A New Revolutionary Romance. 12mo, cloth. Price $1 25.

Eutaw. A New Revolutionary Romance. 12mo, cloth. Price $1 25.

Simms's Border Romances of the South, New and Revised Editions, with Illustrations by Darley. Uniform with SIMMS'S REVOLUTIONARY TALES.

I. Guy Rivers. A Tale of Georgia. 12mo, cloth. Price $1 25.

II. Richard Hurdis. A Tale of Alabama. 12mo, cloth. Price $1 25.

III. Border Beagles. A Tale of Mississippi. 12mo, cloth. Price $1 25.

IV. Charlemont. A Tale of Kentucky. 12mo, cloth. Price $1 25.

V. Beauchampe; or, The Kentucky Tragedy. 12mo, cloth. Price $1 25.

VI. Confession; or, The Blind Heart. 12mo, cloth. Price $1 25.

The Yemassee; A Romance of South Carolina. By WM. GILMORE SIMMS, Esq. 12mo, cloth. Price $1 25.

Southward, Ho! a Spell of Sunshine. By WM. GILMORE SIMMS, Esq. 12mo, cloth. Price $1 25.

The Noctes Ambrosianæ. By Professor WILSON, J. G. LOCKHART, JAMES HOGG, and Dr. MAGINN. Edited, with Memoirs and Notes, by Dr. R. SHELTON MACKENZIE. In 5 volumes. Price $5 00.

The Odoherly Papers; forming the first portion of the Miscellaneous Writings of the late Dr. MAGINN. With an Original Memoir, and copious Notes, by Dr. R. SHELTON MACKENZIE. 2 vols. Price $2 00.

The Shakespeare Papers, and the Homeric Ballads; forming Vol. III. of the Miscellaneous Writings of the late Dr. MAGINN. Edited by Dr. R. SHELTON MACKENZIE. [In Press.]

Bits of Blarney. By Dr. R. SHELTON MACKENZIE, Editor of "Sheil's Sketches of the Irish Bar," "Noctes Ambrosianæ," &c. 12mo, cloth. Price $1 00.

Table Traits. By Dr. DORAN, Author of "Habits and Men," &c. 12mo, cloth. $1 25.

Habits and Men. By Dr. DORAN, Author of "Table Traits," "The Queens of England under the House of Hanover." 12mo. Price $1 00.

Calavar; The Knight of the Conquest. A Romance of Mexico. By the late Dr. ROBERT MONTGOMERY BIRD, Author of "Nick of the Woods;" with Illustrations by Darley. 12mo, cloth. Price $1 25.

Nick of the Woods, or the Jibbenainosay. A Tale of Kentucky. By the late Dr. ROBERT MONTGOMERY BIRD, Author of "Calavar," "The Infidel," &c. New and Revised Edition, with Illustrations by Darley. 12mo, cloth. Price $1 25.

The Pretty Plate; A New and Beautiful Juvenile. By JOHN VINCENT. Illustrated by Darley. 1 vol., 16mo, cloth, gilt. Price 50 cents; extra gilt edges, 75 cents.

Vasconselos. A Romance of the New World. By FRANK COOPER. 12mo, cloth. Price $1 25.

A Stray Yankee in Texas. By PHILIP PAXTON. With Illustrations by Darley. Second Edition. 12mo, cloth. Price $1 25.

The Wonderful Adventures of Capt. Priest. By PHILIP PAXTON. With Illustrations by Darley. 12mo, cloth. Price $1 00.

Western Characters; being Types of Border Life in the Western States. By J. L. McCONNEL, Author of "Talbot and Vernon," "The Glens," &c., &c. With Six Illustrations by Darley. 12mo, cloth. Price $1 25.

The Master-Builder; or, Life at a Trade. By DAY KELLOGG LEE. 1 vol., 12mo. Price $1 00.

Merrimack; or, Life at the Loom. By DAY KELLOGG LEE. 1 vol., 12mo. Price $1 00.

- The Works of Edgar Allan Poe. Complete in three volumes. With a Portrait; a Memoir by James Russell Lowell; and an Introductory Essay by N. P. Willis. Edited by RUFUS W. GRISWOLD. 12mo. Price $3 50.
- The Cavaliers of England; or, The Times of the Revolutions of 1642 and 1688. By HENRY WILLIAM HERBERT. 1 vol., 12mo. Price $1 25.
- Knights of England, France, and Scotland. By HENRY WILLIAM HERBERT. 1 vol., 12mo. Price $1 25.
- The Chevaliers of France, from the Crusaders to the Mareschals of Louis XIV. By HENRY WILLIAM HERBERT. Author of "The Cavaliers of England," "Cromwell," "The Brothers," &c., &c. 1 vol., 12mo. Price $1 25.
- Marmaduke Wyvil; An Historical Romance of 1651. By HENRY WILLIAM HERBERT, Author of "The Cavaliers of England," &c., &c. Fourteenth Edition. Revised and Corrected. Price $1 25.
- The Forest. By J. V. HUNTINGTON, Author of "Lady Alice," "Alban," &c. 1 vol., 12mo. Second Edition. Price $1 25.
- Alban; or, The History of a Young Puritan. By J. V. HUNTINGTON. 2 vols., 12mo, cloth. Price $2 00.
- Isa: a Pilgrimage. By CAROLINE CHESEBRO'. 1 vol., 12mo, cloth. Price $1 00.
- The Children of Light. By CAROLINE CHESEBRO', Author of "Isa, a Pilgrimage," "Dream-Land by Daylight," &c., &c. 12mo, cloth. Price $1 00.
- Dream-Land by Daylight: A Panorama of Romance. By CAROLINE CHESEBRO'. Illustrated by Darley. 1 vol., 12mo. Price $1 25.
- Clovernook; or, Recollections of Our Neighborhood in the West. By ALICE CAREY. Illustrated by Darley. First and Second Series. Fourth Edition. 2 vols. 12mo. Price $2 00.
- Hagar; A Story of To-Day. By ALICE CAREY, Author of "Clovernook," "Lyra, and Other Poems," &c. 1 vol., 12mo. Price $1 00.
- Cap-Sheaf, a Fresh Bundle. By LEWIS MYRTLE. 1 vol., 12mo, cloth. Price $1 00.
- The Youth of Jefferson; or, A Chronicle of College Scrapes at Williamsburg, Va., 1764. Cloth. Price 75 cents.
- Tales and Traditions of Hungary. By THERESA PULSZKY. With a Portrait of the Author. 1 vol. Price $1 25.
- The Lion Skin and the Lover Hunt. By CHARLES DE BERNARD. 12mo. Price $1 00.
- Easy Warren and his Coteremporaries: Sketched for Home Circles. By WILLIAM TURNER COGGESHALL. Price $1 00.

You Have heard of Them : being Sketches of Statesmen and Politicians, Painters, Composers, Instrumentalists and Vocalists, Authors and Authoresses. By Q. With Portraits on Steel of Horace Ver-net and Julia Grisi. 12mo, cloth. Price $1 00.

Satire and Satirists. By JAMES HANNAY. 12mo, cloth. Price 75 cents.

Full Proof of the Ministry. By the Rev. JOHN N. NOR-
TON. 12mo, cloth. Price 75 cents.

Dickens's Little Folks, in a Series of 18mo Volumes, with Illustrations, Neatly Bound in Cloth. Price 38 cents.

- | | |
|------------------------------|---------------------|
| 1. Little Nell. | 4. Florence Dombey. |
| 2. Oliver and the Jew Fagin. | 5. Smike. |
| 3. Little Paul. | 6. The Child Wife. |

This is a series of volumes which has been undertaken with a view to supply the want of a class of books for children, of a vigorous, manly tone, combined with a plain and concise mode of narration. The writings of Charles Dickens have been selected as the basis of the scheme, on account of the well-known excellence of his portrayal of children, and the interests connected with children—qualities which have given his volumes their strongest hold on the hearts of parents. With this view the career of LITTLE NELL and her GRANDFATHER, OLIVER, LITTLE PAUL, FLORENCE DOMBEY, SMIKE, and the CHILD-WIFE, have been detached from the large mass of matter with which they were originally connected, and presented, in the author's own language, to a new class of readers, to whom the little volume will, we doubt not, be as attractive as the larger originals have so long proved to the general public.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Works of the Honorable William H. Seward, with a Memoir, Portrait and other Engravings on steel. 3 vols., 8vo. Price per volume, cloth, $2 50; half calf, $3 75; full calf, extra, $4 50.

The Study of Words. By R. C. TRENCH, B. D., Professor of Divinity in King's College, London. 1 vol., 12mo. Price 75 cents.

On the Lessons in Proverbs. By R. C. TRENCH, B. D., Author of the "Study of Words." 12mo, cloth. Price 50 cents.

The Synonyms of the New Testament. By R. C. TRENCH, B. D., Author of the "Study of Words," "Lessons in Proverbs," &c., &c. Third Edition, Revised and Enlarged. 12mo, cloth. Price 75 cents.

English, Past and Present. By Rev. RICHARD CHENEVIX TRENCH, B. D. 12mo. Price 75 cents.

Macaulay's Speeches. Speeches by the Right Hon. T. B. MACAULAY, M. P., Author of "The History of England," "Lays of Ancient Rome," &c., &c. 2 vols., 12mo. Price $2 00.

Meagher's Speeches. Speeches on the Legislative Independence of Ireland, with Introductory Notes. By THOMAS FRANCIS MEAGHER. 1 vol., 12mo, cloth. Portrait. Price $1 00.

Lectures and Miscellanies. By HENRY JAMES. 1 vol., 12mo, cloth. Price $1 25.

Characters in the Gospel, illustrating Phases of Character at the Present Day. By Rev. E. H. CHAPIN. 1 vol. 12mo. Price 50 cents.

Ballou's Review of Beecher. The Divine Character Vindicated. A Review of the "Conflict of Ages." By Rev. MOSES BALLOU. 1 vol., 12mo, cloth. Price $1 00.

Maurice's Theological Essays. Theological Essays. By FREDERICK DENISON MAURICE, M. A., Chaplain of Lincoln's Inn. From the Second London Edition, with a New Preface, and other Additions. 1 vol., 12mo, cloth. Price $1 00.

The Pictorial Bible; being the Old and New Testaments according to the Authorized Version; Illustrated with more than One Thousand Engravings, representing the Historical Events, after celebrated Pictures; the Landscape Scenes, from Original Drawings, or from Authentic Engravings; and the Subjects of Natural History, Costume, and Antiquities, from the best sources. 1 vol., 4to, embossed binding. Price $6 00.

London, May 1851

1/2

55

55

14 DAY USE
RETURN TO DESK FROM WHICH BORROWED LOAN DEPT.

This book is due on the last date stamped below, or on the date to which renewed. Renewals only:

Tel. No. 642-3405

Renewals may be made 4 days prior to date due.
Renewed books are subject to immediate recall.

Miss St. Ann

INTER-LIBRARY

LOAN

DEC 17 1971

LD21A-40m-8,'71
(P6572s10)476-A-32

General Library
University of California
Berkeley

U.C. BERKELEY LIBRARIES

C035930699

10040013

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA LIBRARY

